Md. Politics In Bridge Talk Denied By Roosevelt

Says Construction Not Likely, Though He Praised One at Morgantown; Sees No Link With 'Purge'

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt yesterday severely criticized newspaper articles that connected his approval of PWA assistance for two Maryland bridges, one to span the Potomac, with his efforts to defeat Senator Tydings in Maryland's recent primary.

At the same time, he verified reports there was no likelihood of the bridges being constructed.

The President referred to what he termed a completely false newspaper story regarding the projects, gave what he said were the facts back of the bridges, and then said he had pricked the bubble on the newspaper story.

Joins in Laughter

At his press conference, he said also that results of the Democratic primaries in Maryland and Georgia, where his efforts to unseat Senator Tydings and Senator Walter F. George failed, checked with his prognostications. He said he had been only 1,000 votes wrong in one forecast. He added that before nightfall he would show associates his forecast on the outcome of yesterday's New York race in which Representative John J. O'Conner sought renomination over Presidential opposition.

The President said it was well known that he does not participate in elections between parties—and joined in the burst of laughter that followed. The remark was in reply to a question whether he would support Tydings in the general election. Reminded of his observation he would not oppose a liberal Republican running against a reactionary Democrat, he said he had been speaking of principles. To another question whether principles were involved in Maryland, he said they were.

Difficulty in Financing

Questioning that led to the President's remarks on the bridges was prompted by the Chief Executive's trip to southern Maryland and the Eastern Shore early in the month, a trip on which he took occasion to boost the candidacy of Representative David J. Lewis against Senator Tydings, one of the principal targets in the "purge" undertaking.

On September 4 he visited Morgantown, Md., site of the proposed bridge across the Potomac and said construction of the bridge there "has got to be done just as fast as we can possibly do it." On the following day he spoke at Denton, Md., in the interests of Lewis' campaign and a liberalized Democratic Party.

He said at Morgantown that bridge was needed not only to facilitate travel between Maryland and Virginia but also in the interest of national defense. He added:

"And so I hope to come back, perhaps before I leave Washington, to talk at the inauguration, the start-

O'Connor Takes Slim Lead on Fay; Curley Upsetting Hurley

Ex-Governor Almost 2-1 Ahead in Democrat Race; Saltonstall Pacing G. O. P.

Roosevelt Indorsee Carries Own Precinct; Hot Charges Fly to the Last

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 20.—Former Gov. James M. Curley, a political veteran who met defeat in recent tries for a United States Senatorship and the Boston mayoralty, tonight jumped into a long lead in a four-man fight for the Massachusetts Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Simultaneously, substantial returns from a four-man contest for the Republican nomination for Governor gave an almost overwhelming lead to Leverett Saltonstall, socially prominent former Speaker of the Massachusetts House.

Unofficial returns from 529 precincts out of 1,762 gave Gov. Hurley, 39,483; Curley, 70,763; Lieut. Gov. Francis E. Kelley, 28,957; Richard M. Russell, 8,387.

For the Republican gubernatorial nomination, 255 precincts gave:

Frederick Butler, 6,491; William McMasters, 9,057; Saltonstall, 69,321; Richard Whitcomb, 7,800.

Eight of Massachusett's incumbent 15-man delegation in the National House—now dominantly Republican by a 3 to 1 ration—were unopposed for renomination in today's party balloting, but will meet opposition in the November elections.

They were Representatives Edith Nourse Rogers, Holmes, Bates, Tink-

New York, Sept. 20 (U.P.).—Representative O'Connor, chairman of the House Rules Committee seeking renomination against New Deal opposition, held a slight advantage over James A. Fay, Administration-indorsed opponent, in the Sixteenth Congressional District primary tonight.

Complete unofficial returns from 21 out of 84 precincts gave: O'Connor, 1,928; Fay, 1,891.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—Five election districts out of 84 in the Sixteenth Congressional District race gave James H. Fay, choice of President in the last primary of his "purge" campaign, 418 votes to 407 for Representative O'Connor, Democratic incumbent.

Representative O'Connor also entered the Republican primary in his district, home alike of the very rich and the very poor. In the Republican contest he faced Allen W. Dulles, candidate of Republican organization leaders.

The issue of Mr. Roosevelt's intervention in his party's primaries—an intervention that failed successively in South Carolina, Georgia and Maryland—was a live one.

O'Connor, chairman of the powerful House Rules Committee, entered

6 Named To Solve Rail Worries

Roosevelt Passes Over Wage Dispute to Seek a Basic Plan for Revamping U. S. Transport

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt last night named a six-man committee of railroad and labor officials to frame legislative recommendations for a sound transportation system, following a two-hour conference with company and union spokesmen.

Unexpectedly the President passed over the wage issue. Instead, he asked three railway executives and three representatives of railway labor organizations to serve as an informal committee to recommend some permanent solution of the crucial plight of the carriers. The committee opened conferences at once in the oval room of the White House.

The President said the wage issue now nearing a showdown between railroads and unions is only one element in the broader rail problem, and failed to take a personal hand in the pay controversy. He will not depart from the tested mediation procedure provided in the law.

Unions Vote on Strike

This means last resort machinery of the national mediation act will be invoked to prevent a transportation tie-up if ballots counted next Monday show a general union strike vote. On recommendations of the National Mediation Board, the President will proclaim a national emergency and appoint an emergency fact-finding board.

Mr. Roosevelt told reporters he expects to name this board next week. Although railroads have served notice they will impose a 15 per cent pay cut October 1, and rail unions are voting to strike if they do, both wage slash and walkout would be suspended automatically for 60 days after appointment of the board. Meantime, a settlement would be sought on the basis of the board's findings.

Early Report Asked

Called into conference yesterday on the broader rail problem, and later appointed by the President to work out a basis for legislative action, were the following:

Carl R. Gray, vice chairman of the board of the Union Pacific system.

M. W. Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Ernest E. Norris, president of the Southern Railway.

George M. Harrison, president of the railway labor executives association.

D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Fire-

Prague Reported Informed Nazis Will Attack Thursday

Benes Makes Appeal for Settlement at Hague Court; Heads of Army Reported Urging Him to War

By the United Press.

Prague, Sept. 20.—Czechoslovakia tonight answered Germany's ultimatum for outright surrender of the Sudeten border areas with a "demand" that Great Britain and France immediately reconsider their support of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's bold price of peace, the government-controlled Czech news agency announced.

Britain and France, it was announced, must "reconsider their proposals" endorsing dismemberment of the borderlands as the last alternative to a German invasion.

Action At Hague Suggested

From well-informed sources it was learned simultaneously that the Prague government, hoping for some eleventh hour miracle, had asked Britain and France to carry Hitler's ultimatum before the Hague Court or some other neutral body of arbitration.

From Berlin, however, came angry assertions that Hitler demands an immediate and almost unconditional surrender of the Sudeten areas and has fixed a time limit—some said 10 days—for their incorporation in the Reich and would permit no diplomatic delays.

Hitler's impatience was disturbing because 1,000,000 or more troops are poised, awaiting only his order to invade Czechoslovakia.

The government's reply, which reached the British and French governments tonight, was said to refer to the German-Czechoslovak arbitration treaty of 1925 which was incorporated in the now-dead Locarno Treaty. It was asserted in the note, however, that Germany in 1936 and again this year recognized the validity of the treaty of arbitration.

Czechoslovakia's proposal was said to contemplate arbitration before The Hague Court of International Justice, by a special committee of one German, one Czech and three neutrals or by a permanent arbitration committee to be set up by the powers.

Ask For Better Terms

The note to Britain and France says in its preface that the sacrifices which Britain and France want Czechoslovakia to make would leave it a mere "puppet state" without any foreign policy, defenses or independent commerce.

The reply made it clear that the government expects the British and French governments to exert themselves to obtain more lenient terms from Hitler, supposedly when Der Fuehrer and Prime Minister Chamberlain confer at Godesberg on the Rhine Thursday.

The cabinet's formal communique announcing the dispatch of the answer spoke only of a request for "further conversations," but the Czech news agency elaborated upon the announcement—although perhaps mostly for the sake of internal consumption to bolster Czech morale.

"We learn in connection with the Czechoslovak note that the Czech government has demanded that the Anglo-French governments should reconsider their proposals about cession of the frontier districts to

Bonnet Asserts There Is 'Reason for Hope' After Midnight Cabinet Session and Urgent Telephoning to Prague; French Labor Parties' Indignation Over 'Shamful Betrayal' Rises; Paris Extends Defense Precautions

BULLETIN

Prague (Wednesday) Sept. 21 (AP).—The British and French ministers early today delivered a demarche to President Benes urging most seriously acceptance of their governments' plan for dismemberment of Czechoslovakia.

By the Associated Press.

Paris (Wednesday), Sept. 21.—Officials in the French foreign ministry disclosed today France and Britain have refused to accept Czechoslovakia's plan for arbitration of her Sudetenland dispute with Germany and have demanded a flat yes or no answer.

Sources close to the foreign ministry said the new demand the two western European democracies were making on France's ally was a virtual ultimatum, warning that if Czechoslovakia refused to accept the French-British proposals to cede the Sudeten areas to Reichsfuehrer Hitler it would be impossible to guarantee the future existence of the country.

24-Hour Time Limit Reported

[The United Press reported Britain and France had notified Prague to surrender within 24 hours, or bear the consequences of invasion alone.

[The two powers warned that Hitler has "issued marching orders"—meaning a smashing invasion of Czechoslovakia—effective late tomorrow, unless Czechoslovakia yields to his demands.

[Britain and France were said to have informed President Benes of Czechoslovakia that Prague's unconditional surrender must be obtained before Prime Minister Chamberlain meets Reichsfuehrer Hitler tomorrow at Godesberg. Their meeting is scheduled for 3 p. m. (9 a. m., E. S. T.)—editor's note.]

The ministers of the two powers were instructed to present the new demand to Prague at once and to demand an immediate reply tonight.

(A source close to the foreign ministry in Prague said that up to 1 a. m. (7 a. m., E. S. T., Tuesday) neither French nor the British Minister had made any overtures since dispatch of the Czechoslovak government's note in answer to their proposals.)

(Later a Reuter, British news agency, dispatch to London from Prague said, however, that President Benes received the British Minister, Sir Basil Cochrane-Newton and the French Minister, Victor Leopold De La Croix at 2:15 a. m., when they urged him to accept the London peace terms as they stand.

French Minister Optimistic

(A meeting of the Czechoslovak inner cabinet was summoned immediately after the envoys left, the dispatch added, and it was expected a full cabinet session would follow.)

At the Quai d'Orsay it was said the new demands upon Czechoslovakia were framed in the evening in a long telephone conversation between the French foreign ministry and the British foreign office.

When a late night conference at the French foreign ministry broke up shortly after 1 a. m. (8 p. m., E. S. T., Tuesday), Jules Henry, director in the cabinet of Foreign Minister Bonnet, said cryptically:

"The latest news received from Prague permits them to hope a satisfactory solution is approaching."

It was learned from persons in close contact with Bonnet that France and Britain found "absolutely unacceptable" Czechoslovakia's proposal to settle the Sudeten dispute under her 1926 treaty of friendship and arbitration with Germany.

They said De La Croix had been told to point out in the strongest terms the dangers to Czechoslovakia from what was described as a "negative or dilatory attitude in the face of Nazi preparations along the Czechoslovak borders.'

The government, fearing the crisis was not yet settled, announced tonight it would put all work on air raid protection in Paris region under military rule.

The action was taken to overcome a strike of 160,000 building workers as international tension remained at a high pitch.

Czechoslovakia's reply to the French-British proposals was described as leaving the way open for "continuance of diplomatic negotiations" but giving neither a direct "yes" or "no" answer on the question of ceding Sudeten areas to Hitler.

The note from Prague asked France and Britain to "reconsider" the proposals they submitted to Czechoslovakia Monday calling for surrender of the German-populated sections.

A communique of the labor ministry said the government would requisition factories furnishing material for "passive defense" and sites of refuge construction because of strike delays. It was indicated the workers would be called to the colors and put to work at a wage scale fixed by the government.

Fails to Shake Cabinet

Scathing remarks in Parliamentary quarters and burning sarcasm in the press failed to shake weary cabinet members who continued to maintain that the stand they had taken in favor of granting Hitler's demands was the only one that could have been adopted under the circumstances.

Political experts agreed that resulting dismemberment of the little republic, should such demands be granted, would imperil the position of Premier Daladier's government when Parliament meets again.

Voices of discontent over the "shameful surrender to Hitler" already were predominant in Parliamentary halls.

New York, Sept. 20 (AP).—Leon Jouhaux, leader of the French Trade Unions and former member of the French delegation to the League of Nations, said today that in the event of another European war, the United States would be drawn into it inevitably.

Medical Group To Fight Charge Of 'Monopoly'

Association Will Oppose Any Attempt to Make People Think It Is 'Predatory, Unsocial'

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—The American Medical Association served notice tonight it would oppose "with its utmost power" any attempt "to convict it in the eyes of the people of being a predatory, antisocial monopoly."

That attitude was outlined in an editorial in the organization's Journal in the light of last week's meeting of the house of delegates, governing body of the A. M. A.

Commenting on a proposed investigation by the Department of Justice, "which seeks to obtain an indictment of the American Medical Association as a monopoly," the article set forth:

"The statement has been made repeatedly that the American Medical Association is ready for investigation by any authorized agency, firmly reliant in the belief that its actions are in accordance with its constitutional organization, that they have been taken in the interest of public health and welfare and that it has never violated the established laws of this country.

"The house of delegates urged the board of trustees to oppose with its utmost power, even in the courts of last resort, this apparent attempt to convict the American Medical Association in the eyes of the people of being a predatory, antisocial monopoly."

The house of delegates thus charted the course of the organization embracing 110,000 physicians, since it drafts the policies of the A. M. A.

In announcing a grand jury investigation last uly, Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust prosecution, contended the A. M. A., the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and some officials of both, had attempted to prevent operation of a co-operative health plan in Washington.

In Washington today, however, Attorney General Cummings stated the projected action was against the District Medical Society, and not against the A. M. A.

Printing Office Cafe Strike In Stalemate

Labor Department Puts Conciliator in Dispute but Management and Union Hold Grounds

The Labor Department yesterday undertook to negotiate a settlement of the strike in the Government Printing Office cafeteria after the initial attempt of Printing Office officials and union representatives to adjust their own differences reached a stalemate.

Pecora Transfers Hines Retrial to Another Court

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora today granted District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey's request for transfer of the second trial of James J. Hines, Tammany district leader, to the Court of General Sessions.

Justice Pecora declared a mistrial in the case September 12 after four weeks of testimony on the State's charge that Hines acted as political "front" for the policy racket headed by the late Dutch Schultz.

The mistrial was ordered after Dewey made a reference to testimony before a grand jury in another case.

Justice Pecora reserved jurisdiction over the sentencing of Dewey's three major informer-witnesses, J. Richard (Dixie) Davis, Harry Schoenhaus and George Weinberg, Hines' codefendants who pleaded guilty and turned State's evidence.

William Allen White Warns Industry to Find More Jobs

By Sidney Olson.

Unemployment in the United States is reaching such a dangerous point that capitalism must wipe out some of its fixed charges and give the idle jobs or face going bankrupt paying taxes to support the jobless, William Allen White, famous Kansas editor, told the Seventh International Management Congress last night.

The aging critic of American institutions, his sparkling eyes as sharp as his tongue, was almost sensationally free-spoken as he alternately drubbed capital and labor. Addressing capital, he snapped:

"So you got the present wages and hours law, and bad as you think it is, you certainly had it coming.

"The law was considered by its opponents a kick in the pants for American industry.

"But apparently that is where all Americans—laborers, bosses and consumers—keep their brains, and we got the kick where it would do the most good.

"Moreover, so long as we think with our bile and reason with our

Boothe Farce Opens Season At National

'Kiss The Boys Goodbye' Is Fast and Brittle Comedy, Well and Gaily Acted

By Nelson B. Bell

"KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE." Brock Pemberton presents a new comedy in three acts and six scenes by Clare Boothe. Directed by Antoinette Perry. Settings by John Root; costumes supervised by Margaret Pemberton. At the National Theater.

—THE CAST—

Conductor	Wyman Holmes
Lloyd Lloyd	Millard Mitchell
Cindy Lou Bethany	Helen Claire
George	Frank Wilson
Maimie	Ollie Burcoyne
Madison Breed	John Alexander
B. J. Wickfield	Edwin Nicander
Leslie Rand	Carmel White
Horace Rand	Philip Ober
Herbert Z. Herner	Sheldon Leonard
"Top" Rumson	Hugh Marlowe
Myra Stanhope	Benay Venuta

The owner of the screen rights to Margaret Mitchell's fabulous novel of the South, "Gone With the Wind," has nobody but himself to blame. His procrastination in the matter of filming his picture not only has enabled other producers to steal at least a portion of his potential thunder, but it also has afforded Clare Boothe, one of the sprightliest of the current theater's feminine satirists, the time and opportunity to base a pungent and penetrating farce upon the notorious difficulties he has encountered in casting the stellar role.

In "Kiss the Boys Good-by," revealed for the first time on any metropolitan stage in the National Theater last night, Miss Boothe has taken full advantage of the situation which, figuratively, has been gratuitously deposited upon the keys of her typewriter. She has pitted a seemingly ingenuous daughter of the Deep South against a declasse star of the cinema in a delightfully brutal contest for the coveted contract; she has surrounded the principals in the bitter duel with figures that permit her to place upon the pillory of her barbed wit the advocates of opposing theories of government, the "damned Yankees" and the unreconstructed adherents of the lost cause of the Confederacy, the predatory moguls of the motion picture studios, the sponsors of the present vogue of risque magazines, "cafe society" and even the antagonistic viewpoints of Northern and Southern servitors whose notions of "befo' de wah" domestic service have been seriously warped by the easy funds of the PWA.

At times the fusillade of opposing argument assumes the proportions of a free-for-all verbal melee that lacks any very clear definition of purpose, but out of it all pops an almost continuous barrage of scintillant and seering speeches that touch upon everything from the movies to the Marxian ideology and from the White House to the Georgia sharecroppers.

Attains High Velocity

The comedy is written in three acts and six scenes that pursue a course of cumulative velocity and tumult, embracing all manner of romantic disasters, marital rifts, studio chicaneries, feminine rivalries, shady peccadilloes and boudoir crises, out of which the little girl from the South emerges triumphant in love and a voluntary exile from the celluloids' flickering fame.

It is difficult to detect any sound reason why "Kiss the Boys Good-bye"—which, by the way, is the title of the best-selling novel it is the purpose to picturize in the play—should fall short of a substantial popular success. It is written in the brisk and breezy tempo of the day, indulges in much of the frankly profane speech so much affected in "smart" circles and moves at unflagging speed. In point of fact, the rapidity of its playing last evening was one of its major handicaps, many speeches that no doubt would have been amusing being lost in the audience's enjoyment of the one that had immediately preceded. This is a defect that can easily be remedied as repeated performances lend the piece more adroit timing.

A little deft pruning in each act—the second scenes of each seem to be most in need of attention—also will clarify the comedy's primary intent and "tighten" it into a swift-moving and homogeneous entity of buoyant and brittle entertainment.

Miss Boothe has contrived a farcical charade that confronts the cast with a task that is neither simple nor easy of successful accomplishment. The members of the acting ensemble met last night's test with commendable surety and vigor after only one previous public performance.

Miss Claire Triumphs

Helen Claire, cast in the pivotal character of Cindy Lou Bethany, the embryonic picture star, shouldering the honor of the South and the pride of aristocratic family among belligerent foemen in the alien North, disclosed a command of sustained speech and an unfailing charm that brought brilliant distinction to an exacting and an exhausting role. The part is that of a chattering little magpie from whose lips pours a constant stream of softly accented babble that contains more pith and power than at first meets the ear. Her performance forecasts a soaring future.

Her chief opponent in the joust for professional and private preferment is Benay Venuta, heretofore known to Capital audiences only in musical offerings. Miss Venuta also is a comedienne of parts, capable of lending lusty meanings to words and phrases usually omitted from the vocabularies of ladies. Hugh Marlowe proves a capable and a worthy object of the interest of both young women.

There are numerous others in the roster who contribute effectively to the asperity and humor of the evening. Foremost among them, I should nominate John Alexander, as Madison Breed, the radical columnist; Philip Ober, as Horace Rand, the author of off-color magazine anecdotes; Millard Mitchell, as the conniving picture director, and Sheldon Leonard, as Herbert Z. Harner, the great producer, whose amorous adventures lead to a bit of lady-like pistoling.

The Gallup Poll

Public Resistance to Party Change Noted in National Survey

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Sept. 20.—One of the issues basic to the recently attempted New Deal purge was President Roosevelt's avowed intention to make the Democratic Party the "liberal" party. The emphasis he placed on the conservative-liberal issue pointed possibly to the day when Liberal and Conservative parties may take the place of the Republican and Democratic labels.

GALLUP.

How far is the public willing to go along with Roosevelt in reconstituting the political parties of today?

A study just completed among a cross-section of persons listed in Who's Who in America, catalogue of prominent leaders, shows a slight majority in favor of giving up our present parties and having new ones along the liberal-conservative line.

Among the general voting population, on the other hand, the idea of forming new parties has met with resistance for several years, as indicated by surveys conducted up to last summer.

The poll of persons listed in Who's Who, which was conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion, asked:

"Do you think the time has come to give up our two present political parties and have two new ones, one for conservatives, the other for liberals?"

The vote was:

Who's Who
Yes	52%
No	48

Up to the time President Roosevelt opened the issue with his purge campaign, the general voting population, however, was against the formation of new conservative-liberal parties. An Institute survey of last April, for example, showed the large majority voting "no" to the same question put to persons in Who's Who. The actual results were:

Form Two New Parties? (April, 1938)
Yes	30%
No	70

This study found that the Democrats were no more anxious than the Republicans to see new conservative-liberal parties take the place of the present parties. At that time—several months prior to the purge—less than a third of the Democrats wanted to see new parties formed, and about the same proportion of Republicans.

The remaining question is whether President Roosevelt's public attempts to draw the conservative-liberal line have influenced opinion since the Institute's last test. A new survey will be undertaken soon to measure the trend.

January 1 Fixed For Setting New Air Mail Rates

The Civil Aeronautics Authority Monday fixed January 1 as the tentative deadline for revamping the present method of determining air-mail rates.

At the same time it was announced that G. Grant Mason, Authority member, and Denis Mulligan, consulting counsel in international aviation to the Authority, who are now attending the Fourth International Conference on Private Air Law at Brussels, Belgium, will make a survey of European civil aeronautics before their return to the United States.

Commenting on the prospective system of awarding air-mail contracts, Harllee Branch, former Second Assistant Postmaster General and now a member of the Authority, declared "No one should be deluded with the idea that all an airline will have to do to be given generous sums from the Government treasury is to convince the Authority that it has succeeded in operating at a deficit."

The agency already has started scientific rate-making studies which will form the basis for new contracts.

Marine Board Ready to Rush Ships for War

Commission Determined Not to Be Caught Napping if Hostilities Divert Foreign Boats

Speeding construction of a 50-ship, first-year merchant marine program, the United States Maritime Commission is prepared to step up present minimum shipbuilding requirements in event of a European war, it was learned last night.

It was stated authoritatively the commission does not intend to be caught napping if foreign flag ships now serving this country are withdrawn from their trade routes for auxiliary purposes of belligerents.

The commission at present is proceeding on a minimum program basis worked out before the current tension developed, but emphasis has been placed on prompt construction, rehabilitation of ships out of service, and maintenance of close contact with the Navy on design and defense features.

Renovation Set Soon

Renovation of transpacific ships now tied up on the West Coast is slated for early action. Some $2,000,000 is expected to be spent in repairing 13 Dollar Line ships to put them again in service by the first of the year, under private management, but with the commission controlling 90 per cent of the stock.

Negotiations also are going forward with the Pacific Northwest Oriental Line, Inc., of Seattle, which has no ships, but was organized with the idea of taking over some or all of the ships of the American Mail, which has gone out of business, the States teamship Co., the Admiral Oriental Line and the Oceanic Steamship Co.

Thirty-seven new ships, to cost $103,000,000, already have been ordered constructed under this year's program, including the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey's 12 high-speed tankers, and 20 special type cargo ships which the commission has ordered on its own account, and may either charter, sell or operate itself. On October 18 bils will be opened on a maximum of 12 additional cargo vessels of a still later design, with 16½ knots speed, and with unusually large cargo space. Record progress has been made in construction of some of the vessels started early in the year. One of the tankers, on which bids were opened only last January, will be off the ways in December.

Secretary Sees All Designs

Additional ships to be constructed by operating companies themselves under operating differential or construction differential subsidies include three by the Mississippi Shipping Co. and eight by the Ishmian Shipping Co.

All designs are submitted to the Secretary of the Navy for approval, and close co-operation is maintained through Commander Howard L. Vickery, head of the commission's technical division, who formerly served with the Navy's Bureau of Construction and Repair. Special defense features are incorporated in all ships approved by the commission, including space for gun placements.

Although the program is primarily designed for promotion of export trade, it was pointed out that the law also envisioned use of the merchant marine as a naval auxiliary in time of war, and ultimate American independence of foreign bottoms. Among the world's eight leading maritime nations, the United States has dropped to fourth in tonnage, sixth in speed and seventh in age.

The commission's program to replace its nearly obsolete merchant fleet of World War origin contemplates construction of at least 50 ships a year for 10 years. Some experts have recommended maximum construction of 250 ships. Outbreak of war in Europe, it was stated, is certain to be followed by general expansion of present plans.

Md. Delegates Win Cheers in Legion Parade

Convention Gets Down to Business Again Today After Brief but Vivid Annual Pageant

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Calif., Sept. 20.—The big parade got under way today as the American Legion, meeting here in its twentieth annual convention, put business aside.

Veterans forgot for the moment it was 20 years since the Armistice released them into civilian life. They strutted past the coliseum where National Commander J. Doherty of Woburn, Mass., stood. The parade was the shortest in Legion history.

Tomorrow, with all frivolity finished, the Legion again gets down to serious business ending Thursday with the unopposed election of Stephen Chadwick, of Washington, and the choosing of next year's convention city, Chicago being unopposed.

Maryland's commander, Herbert L. Rhodes, after passing the stand left the parade to stand beside Doherty while his State passed by. The Federal Drum and Bugle Corps of Baltimore, colored veterans all, received a fine hand in this delegation. Adjutant General Milton A. Record, war time hero, marched with his State.

Watson B. Miller, national rehabilitation director of the Legion, and John Thomas Taylor, legislative officers, both nationally known, marched with the District of Columbia unit.

Virginia, with a small delegation, was followed by Maine.

Prison Head and 9 Aides Indicted In Baking Deaths

Philadelphia, Sept. 20 (AP).—Murder and manslaughter indictments were returned today by the grand jury against 10 officials and guards of the Philadelphia County Prison where four convicts recently died from heat in punishment cells.

Those indicted included William B. Mills, superintendent of the prison, and Frank A. Craven, deputy warden.

James McGuire, captain of guards; and Francis J. Smith and Alfred W. Brough, guards, also were indicted on murder and manslaughter charges.

Guards Robert Morrow, William Staines, Thomas Cavanaugh, John Mulherin and Sylvester Weaver were indicted on charges of manslaughter.

The convicts were found "baked to death" in their cells August 22. Of the 14 persons held for the grand jury two prison physicians and two guards were not indicted.

Democratic Leaders Seek Justice for Farmers, Wallace Says, Asking Vermonters' Support

By the Associated Press.

Burlington, Vt., Sept. 20.—Asserting that "to thousands of farm people over the northern United States it is becoming more and more apparent that most Democratic leaders stand for agricultural justice," Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, today urged Vermonters to "carry your State for the Democratic ticket."

WALLACE.

In a prepared address at Vermont's Democratic State convention, Wallace cited what he described as "some of the ways in which national Democratic policies are truly representative of Vermont character."

Wallace, whose father served as Agriculture Secretary under Vermont-born President Coolidge, said he changed his affiliation to the Democratic Party because "the Republican high command had no concern whether farmers obtained a fair share of the national income."

President Roosevelt said yesterday he had not offered Senator McAdoo (Democrat), California, the position of Comptroller General or any other Government job. McAdoo, who was supported by Mr. Roosevelt, was defeated in the recent California Democratic primary.

Senator Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, majority leader, said yesterday he had accepted invitations to speak for Democratic senatorial nominees in Iowa, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Kansas, Illinois and Ohio. He added he might take on more if he found he could spare the time from his own campaign.

Barkley said he would draw no line between Administration-supported nominees and those who had been opposed by the Administration.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 20 (AP).—A third term for President Roosevelt, enabling him to carry out further economic changes, received the unanimous indorsement of the United Rubber Workers of American today.

Among 130 delegates claiming to represent 63,000 members in the union, an affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, the only dispute over Mrs. Roosevelt and the New Deal centered on whether he should be called "one of the greatest" or "the greatest" of Presidents.

Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, predicted yesterday Congress would pass a Government reorganization bill next year if President Roosevelt submitted proposals calling for specific changes in certain departments.

The North Dakotan said he believed the reorganization bill failed last year because "Congress objected to that grant of general power that left Congress fearing some things might be done under the bill that Congress would disapprove."

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 20 (AP).—Lieut. Gov. Thomas Kennedy and Phillip Murray, right-hand men of John L. Lewis, tonight urged Pennsylvania C. I. O. unionists to work for election of the State Democratic ticket in November.

Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, and Murray, vice president, issued a joint statement while leaders of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor were gathering here for a conference tomorrow to choose which ticket they will support.

The State Federation called a meeting of its executive council in the midst of a controversy with National President William Green over his support of Senator James J. Davis, Republican candidate for re-election.

Poles Ask Silesia Of Czechoslovakia As Refugees Enter

Teschen, Poland (at the Czechoslovak border), Sept. 20 (AP).—Several hundred Polish and German refugees, some complaining of persecution in Czechoslovakia and others evading service in the Czechoslovak army, arrived today in this Polish border district.

Other refugees have been trickling across for the last few months.

A big anti-Czechoslovakia demonstraion was held today in the Polish half of this town. The noise of it could be heard easily in the Czechoslovak portion across the River Olsa.

A resolution was adopted demanding that the government use every means to obtain immediate cession of Czechoslovakia Silesia to Poland.

Reports were current in Warsaw of Polish troop concentrations along this border, but there was no confirmation.

Postal Chiefs Given Case of Mrs. Toulson

Her Own Department to Investigate Charge of Tydings Postmistress Aided Lewis Campaign

The case of Mrs. Maude R. Toulson, postmistress at Salisbury, Md., has been referred to the Postoffice Department by the Justice Department, Chairman Sheppard, of the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee, stated yesterday as Marylanders awaited the results of recounts in four counties of Democratic gubernatorial ballots.

Mrs. Toulson was charged by Senator Tydings with engaging in political activity during his campaign for renomination. The Maryland Senator asserted that she was actively aiding his opponent, Representative Lewis.

The Senate committee sustained the charge and referred the matter both to the Justice Department and the Postoffice Department for investigation and report.

Inquiry Pledged

Brien McMahon, Assistant Attorney General, wrote the committee that investigations of violations of the U. S. code, as charged, come within the jurisdictions of the Postoffice Department. Consequently, he said, he was referring tre matter accordingly.

W. W. Howes, First Assistant Postmaster General, wrote: "We have requested the chief postoffice inspector to have a most careful and thorough investigation made of this matter."

Postponement of the Maryland convention, now scheduled for next Wednesday, was predicted in Baltimore political circles yesterday after reports of recounts in the Jackson-O'Conor contest indicated that they may not be completed in time for the delegates to meet.

The Anne Arundel County elections board decided not to begin the recount before Monday, and Frederick County has not set a date for the beginning of its retabulation. Anne Arundel officials said they would need at least three days and perhaps more time to complete the recount.

Meanwhile, in Allegany County, where the recount has been under way for several days, William Curran, attorney for O'Conor, contended an effort was being made to disfranchise voters.

"Apparently the main idea of some persons," he said, "is to find ways of disfranchising voters whose ballots were honestly cast, on the claim that the ballots were spoiled by marks so fine they cannot be seen with the eye.

"It was our desire to get a fair and accurate count of the votes cast when the board of supervisors of elections admitted that returns were hepelessly jumbled. The methods being used are unfair to voters whose ballots are thrown out on technicalities that have no real bearing in the case."

Jackson carried Allegany County in earlier returns by a 54-vote margin. The recount so far has given O'Conor a 5-vote lead. If the young attorney general carries Allegany County, political observers believe he will have enough first and second choice ballots to win the nomination.

Other counties in which recounts have been ordered or started are Queen Annes, Caroline, Wicomico and Garrett.

Maybank Ruled Naminee in S. C. For Governor

Columbia, S. C., Sept. 20 (AP).—The South Carolina Democratic Executive Committee late today declared Burnet R. Maybank, of Charleston, the nominee for Governor and voted 41 to 0 to dismiss the protest of Wyndham Manning, of Sumter, defeated in a runoff primary last week.

Manning in his formal protest asked the committee to throw out all ballots cast in the runoff in Charleston County. He charged that t"he entire election in Charleston County was permeated with fraud throughout."

Complete, unofficial returns had showed that Maybank led Manning by about 14,000 votes in the State. Charleston County gave Maybank, the Mayor of Charleston, a lead of more than 20,000 votes.

'Alcohol' Death Found Due to Injury; 6 Held

Five youths and a 21-year-old woman were held by police last night for investigation of a homicide case more than 48 hours after the death of the victim had been certified as "acute alcoholism."

The belated investigation of the death of John Edward Baker, 29, of 3340 N street northwest, a house painter, took place after:

Baker's arrest on a charge of intoxication.

The arrest and subsequent release of his alleged assailants.

The release of his body without an autopsy.

An autopsy at the District Morgue yesterday which necessitated transfer of the body from a Clarendon (Va.) funeral home where it had been prepared for burial, disclosed Baker died of a skull fracture. Investigators said last night the man had been beaten in the vicinity of Fifth and G streets northwest early Saturday by a band of young men who meant to rob him.

U. S. Shipyards Twice as Busy As Year Ago

But Many Problems Must Be Solved in Order to Develop an Adequate Merchant Fleet

New York, Sept. 20.—The objectives of the Maritime Commission are clear—it is determined to build and maintain an American merchant fleet, says the Index, published by the New York Trust Co. today. 'The major reasons for our losing position in the intense competition prevailing among international shipping lines are widely known," the Index explains. "It has and does cost more in terms of both labor and materials to build vessels in American shipyards than anywhere else. And, in addition to the extra capital charges thus incurred, it has and does cost more to operate a vessel under the American flag, paying American wages, than under the flag of any other nation.

"Furthermore, most important maritime nations subsidize their merchant fleets in some manner. Even the United States has built ships and indulged in a type of subsidy by way of mail contracts, a practice contributing its own difficulties, but, although unsatisfactory, aiding substantially in maintaining an American merchant marine.

"There has been no apparent alteration of aims nor slackening in the commission's program under the chairmanship of Admiral Emory S. Land. He recently stated, 'a careful survey of the requirements of our commerce and for purposes of national defense indicates that minimum needs call for 500 new ships in the next 10 years. These ships will cost approximately $1,250,000,000 which is no beggarly sum. This program is within our capabilities.'

"Shipbuilding has been stimulated and recent private shipyard activity has been nearly twice that of a year previous. Some of this construction has been due to increased naval needs which, with projected plans and the need to keep pace with world-wide increase in armament, are expected to result in accelerating volumes of work for both private and Navy shipyards.

Czechs Propose Fate Be Fixed In a Court

Czech

Germany," the Czech news agency said.

"This note specifies the government's views and objections to the Franco-British proposals."

Announcement Official

The news agency announcement was highly significant of the cabinet's defiant attitude — because strict censorship has been imposed and everything appearing in the press must obtain government approval.

The cabinet announced late in the day that its reply has been transmitted to the London and Paris governments.

"The government today discussed the Franco-British suggestions in conference," the news agency said.

"This morning's meeting of the government political committee continued this afternoon, together with leaders of the government (coalition) parties.

"One of these meetings occurred in the presence of the president of the republic at Prague castle.

"Another meeting of the government's political committee is expected late tonight.

"All of these conferences are connected with the international crisis arising from the Czechoslovak problem, a solution of which is now being sought in European capitals."

Hope for Miracle.

The official announcement, without revealing the contents of the answer upon which peace in Central Europe rests, said the communication makes possible "further conversations in a spirit of good will."

The government's answer to the Franco-British plan obviously was a play for time, based on hopes that some miracle will occur to prevent Czechoslovakia's outright dismemberment and at the same time save this post-war republic from invasion.

There were widespread doubts, however, that Hitler would consent to any delays of further negotiations because he has demanded that "this Czech problem be settled once and for all, and settled now."

Germany's impatience was forcibly shown today when fugitive Sudeten Germans of the "free corps," established on German soil and armed by the German high command, fought two open battles with Czechs along the border.

Some quarters regarded the government's consent to discuss the carving up of the state and turning the western borderland over to Germany as a conditional capitulation to Hitler.

Army Wants to Fight

There were persistent reports that the Cabinet might resign in protest against what the Czechs regard as a Franco-British "betrayal" of Czechoslovakia's security, and that a military dictatorship might succeed it under 50-year-old Gen. Ludvik Krecji, commander in chief of the army.

The army wants to fight for the Sudenten areas—a natural mountainous barrier against invasion from the west—in the belief that the nation will be at the mercy of complete annihilation if the mountains are surrendered.

Martial law was extended during the day to three more Sudeten German areas—Friedland, Braunau and Trantenau where border fighting occurred during the early morning. Nineteen Sudeten districts thereby were brought under direct military rule and the entire country is under a "state of emergency," a modified form of martial law.

A hint Prague was attempting to deal, not only with the Sudeten issue at hand, but perhaps with the Polish and Hungarian problems as well, was contained in a government announcement that diplomatic exchanges were underway covering the "entire European crisis."

Prague, it was said, is negotiating "with all friendly states."

The troubled public was assured that the government's decision, whatever its final form, would "protect the life and interests of the nation and also the interests of the various national groups."

Locarno Treaty Basis of Appeal

Prague, Sept. 20 (AP).—The Czechoslovak-German treaty of friendship and arbitration on which Czechcoslovakia today based proposals to arbitrate her dispute with Germany over the Sudetenlands was signed by the two governments at Locarno in 1926.

Czechcoslovaks today said Reichsfuehrer Hitler himself had acknowledged validity of the treaty as late as 1936.

It provides for arbitration of disputes by one of two methods before either country resorts to warlike measures:

By a special commission composed of one German, one Czechoslovak and three neutrals.

Britain Presses Czechs to Give Quick Decision

London

said:

"The prime minister and the German Fuehrer and chancellor have decided to resume the conversations which they began at Berchtesgaden at Godesberg on Thursday, September 22, at 3 p. m. (9 a. m., E. S. T.)."

Rejection Reported

Godesberg is on the Rhine, much nearer than the meeting place of last Thursday, when Chamberlain flew to the Bavarian Alps for his talk with Hitler at his Berchtesgaden retreat.

Czechoslovakia's reply to the Anglo-French proposals to cede Sudetenland to Hitler was stated to have caused concern in British official quarters, where Hitler was understood to have definitely opposed further diplomatic negotiations on a matter he was known to be ready to settle by force last week.

The prime minister and his "inner cabinet"—Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax, Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir John Simon, and Home Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare—were expected today to consider the Czechoslovak reply before Chamberlain leaves for Germany tomorrow.

Chamberlain will fly again on this second trip as he did on the first last Thursday, and once more he will be accompanied by Sir Horace Wilson and William Strang, foreign office experts who traveled with him to Berchtesgaden.

Parliament Refused

There was some doubt in London as to just how long Hitler would be willing to allow negotiations to continue, but since Prague abstained from rejecting outright what the Czechs call "an invitation to commit suicide," official London hoped to achieve a solution.

Chamberlain, hard-pressed but still refusing to publish full details of the Anglo-French proposals, declined a request for immediate summoning of Parliament made yesterday by Clement Atlee, leader of the laborite opposition.

Atlee, his party aroused over apparent surrender by Britain, wrote Chamberlain asking him to call Parliament immediately "in view of the nature of the reported proposals . . . which demand desmemberment of a sovereign state at the dictation of the ruler of Germany."

Chamberlain Explains

Last night Chamberlain replied in a letter to Attlee:

"In reply to your letter, Parliament will of course have an opportunity of confirming or rejecting any proposals made by his majesty's government arising out of the present international situation.

"At the moment I am engaged in difficult and delicate negotiations with the object of finding a peaceful solution of the problem, which, if not handled with the utmost care, might have most serious consequences for this country.

"To call Parliament together now and to require me to take part in debates while these negotiations still are in progress would make my task impossible.

"But you may be assured necessary steps will be taken for summoning a special meeting of Parliament as soon as matters have proceeded far enough to make a full statement."

Labor Indignant

The next regular session begins Nov. 1.

Chamberlain's decision followed a stormy joint session of the National Council of Labor, representatives of French trade unions and the Second International Czech Socialist Party, which condemned the Anglo-French "surrender to Hitler's threat of aggression."

The National Council of Labor invited the French delegates to ascertain what pressure they were prepared to put on the French government to modify the French "surrender."

There was an unconfirmed report a French delegate declared the French Confederation of Labor would be prepared to call a general strike in France if London and Paris failed to stiffen their attitude.

The South Wales Miners Federation condemned Chamberlain's "treachery in negotiating a disgraceful settlement."

First Sea Lord Rebels

The laborites were not alone restive. Alfred Duff Cooper, first lord of the admiralty, was reliably asserted to have agreed to the Anglo-French scheme only under strong pressure from his prime minister.

Chamberlain acted to swing other potential Tory rebels into support of his proposals.

As the British ministers, faced with an approaching session of Parliament, anxiously awaited world reaction to surrender to Hitler's cession demands, Lord Halifax called in Anthony Eden, his youthful predecessor, for a 45-minute conference at the foreign office.

The purpose of the interview was understood to be the same as that held with Winston Churchill, veteran of many a British cabinet and leader of an anti-Nazi, collective security favoring group, Monday—that is, to explain the Anglo-French plan.

Churchill and Eden are the two most powerful conservative party opponents to Britain's "appeasement" policy.

Eden resigned as foreign secretary because of his disagreement with Chamberlain's policy in dealing with Europe's dictators.

Cabinet Not Split

Reliable sources said that strong unfavorable reaction to the Anglo-French proposals, especially from the United States, might lead to conservative opposition extending eve nto the cabinet.

Request made by Prague for elucidation of certain details of the scheme was taken as indicating they were ready to negotiate in order to gain time for postpone unfavorable reaction to the proposals from foreign public opinion.

The Czechoslovak request for clarification was understood to concern chiefly the nature of the guarantees they would get for new frontiers to be drawn after the Sudetenland is ceded to Germany.

Informed quarters, apparently in an effort to stop a flood of speculation, began to drop their first hints of the Hitler demands which Chamberlain and Premier Daladier of France had accepted.

Sources close to the Czechs said Chamberlain and Daladier had indorsed cession of all Sudeten German areas where over 50 per cent of the population is German.

British Confirm Stand

The British virtually confirmed envisaged in such a way as to satisfy "the demands of the majority of the population in the Sudeten areas."

They also specified as "matters for discussion later" the three following vital points:

Exchange of German and Czech populations.

Settlement of Polish and Hungarian minority demands.

Nature of international guarantees for the partitioned Czechoslovak State.

Only the British and French guarantees of Czechoslovakia's new borders were certain. Others would have to be obtained "through later discussions," it was said.

It was denied in informed quarters that Warsaw and Budapest claims had already been discussed by Britain and France, despite disclosures today that Poland and Hungary had lodged claims with Britain for their own minorities in Czechoslovakia.

'Warrior Italy' Ready to Fight, Duce Warns

Sword-Rattling Talk to Udine, He Tells World Has 'Need of Knowing This New Fascism'

By the Associated Press.

Udine, Italy, Sept. 20.—Premier Mussolini warned the world today his blackshirt legions, having built a "warrior Italy," would now march on, emphasizing their readiness for war.

In a 20-minute speech that made no mention of the Czechoslovak crisis, Mussolini exalted "the armed power and spiritual power" of Italy that had "liquidated all the old diplomatic tendencies of crippled peace."

Il Duce's sword-rattling speech seemed, however, intended more for his Fascst followers than for the world at large.

"The world will have need of knowing this new Fascist Italy is a warrior Italy, a firm Italy," he shouted, at this northeastern Italian city in the region where only 20 years ago Italian troops fought Austrians.

Scores "World Lying"

He ripped into Fascism's foreign critics with the suggestion that "it would be well to tear up useless papers," apparently referring to press criticism abroad, which increasingly has irritated the Italian dictator.

"One of the gravest illnesses from which the contemporary world suffers is the threat of lying, especially when Italy is the subject," he said.

If the Italians were calm while other peoples underwent exaltation, depression or terror, he said, their "admirable conduct" was the result of 16 years of Fascism, which had made "the Italian soul a block of tempered metal."

Though ignoring the Czechoslovak crisis at Udine, earlier in the day, he told inhabitants of Gorizia he had nothing to add to what he said Sunday at Trieste, when he declared "Italy's place has been chosen" in the case of a general conflict.

"Prefer to Be Feared"

His Udine speech was delivered from the same balcony where 16 years ago on September 20, 1922, he outlined fascism's aims before the march on Rome.

"Evidently many foreigners preferred the Italy of another epoch," he roared. "Many foreigners whom we have every right to scorn believed the Italian people should exist simply to entertain people from other countries.

"All this is finished irrevocably. We prefer to be feared, and hatred makes no difference to us because we scorn it."

When he spoke briefly at Gorizia Mussolini declared Italy was ready to face "drama" if necessary a reference his hearers thought was to war.

2 Freshman Coeds Will Help Lead Maryland Band

Two freshman co-eds, neither of whom has ever juggled a baton before, will help lead the University of Maryland Band at football games this fall.

Appointment of the co-ed drum majors—Shirley Conner, 17, of 5535 Thirtieth street northwest, and Dorothy Arnold, of Hyattsville, Md.—was announced yesterday. They will march beside Drum Major Paul Selbeneichen at the head of the band.

Both girls confessed they had never led a band before, but were anxious to try. They will practice twice a week with specially made small batons in preparation for their debut October 1 at Penn State University.

Dorothy said she didn't know on what basis she and Shirley had been selected from a group of five co-eds, but admitted that the fact they both had blonde hair and blue eyes might have had something to do with it. The drum major and captain of the band made the selections.

County Heads Kill Brentwood School PWA Aid Plea

The Prince Georges County commissioners, at their meeting at Upper Marlboro, Md., yesterday, turned down a recommendation of the board of education to apply to the PWA for assistance in building a consolidated school for pupils from Mount Rainier and Brentwood.

Construction of the school at an estimated cost of $300,000, 45 per cent of which would be paid by the PWA, was urged by a civic delegation from Mount Rainier and Brentwood.

E. J. Shephard, chairman of the school committee of the Mount Rainier-Brentwood P.-T. A., described the present Brentwood School building as "a fire trap and a menace to the health of the pupils."

The recommendation of the board of education, backing the request of the civic delegation, was submitted to the commissioners by Superintendent Nicholas Orem.

Briton Aiding Business Talks Urges Alliance

Anglo-U. S. Pact Would Be Force for Peace, Says Lord Leverhulme, Industrial Leader

An Anglo - American alliance would insure peace even more effectively than an Anglo-American trade agreement, Viscount Leverhulme, distinguished British industrialist, said yesterday.

Lord Leverhulme, who is chairman of the International Management Congress, indicated that close co-operation between the British and American democracies would go far in solving world problems. He refused to comment specifically on the Czech-German crisis.

An ardent Shakespeare lover, Lord Leverhulme spent most of the morning in the Folger Shakespeare Library. He said that although he is a frequent visitor to this country, he had never heard of America's outstanding collection of Shakespeariana until his present trip to Washington.

Aided Model Town

He said he was delighted with the Folger collection, thought the building itself was exceedingly beautiful, and doubted that any collection quite so extensive exists even in England.

Head of an English soap firm with connections in America as well as England, Viscount Leverhulme is one of the guiding spirits behind Port Sunlight, famous model factory town near Liverpool.

"A development of that sort was easier for my father to begin in 1888 than it would be to begin now in 1938," said the 50-year-old peer. "The idea was to build a factory in the country and erect workers' homes around it. That wouldn't be so easy now, in view of the higher cost of land and building construction."

Co-operation Welcome

Lord Leverhulme said his model factory town did not pay for itself, but had to be considered as an investment in the health and prosperity of the workers.

Although on previous trips he has conferred with Secretary Hull and Secretary Roper, Viscount Leverhulme said that he did not expect to see any Cabinet officers on his present visit. He added that he had no connection with the trade agreement negotiations.

As the interview was concluded, Lady Leverhulme interposed a word. "You can go strong on Anglo-American co-operation," she smiled. "We are very much for that."

'Longer Czechs Stall, More I'll Ask'—Hitler

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Sept. 20.—Every day of delay in solving the German-Czechoslovak crisis raises Reichsfuehrer Hitler's price of settlement, a foreign office spokesman declared today.

"Our Fuehrer is constantly raising the ante," he said as the controlled German press raised a new clamor for the outright partition of Czechoslovakia rather than mere annexation of the Sudeten regions bordering Germany.

Border Tension Grows.

More fuel to the central European fires was added by official German news agency reports of mounting border clashes between Sudetens and Czechoslovakia troop detachments.

While reports from the turbulent frontier poured in, Hitler, in his Bavarian retreat, received the envoys of Hungary and Poland for conferences on the crisis.

The Hungarian army chief of staff, Marshal Krestzes-Fischer, came with Premier Impredi and Foreign Minister von Nanya to talk with Hitler and Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop "regarding the untenable condition in Czechcoslovakia."

An official announcement said the Hungarian leaders told the Reichsfuehrer they would remain "steadfast" in demanding self-determination rights for the 700,000 Hungarians among Czechoslovakia's varied peoples.

Presence of the army chief of staff gave an ominous character to the German-Hungarian talks, which followed a quick flight by Hungary's statesmen from Budapest to Berchtesgaden.

Hungarian Regent Horthy also is in Germany as guest of Field Marshal Goering in East Prussia.

Poland's Position Told

Poland's Ambassador to Berlin, Joseph Lipski, outlined the Polish position in regard to the approximately 100,000 Poles in Czechoslovakia.

Sensational headlines fold of new border incidents reported by the official news agency, all of them in the mountains of Silesia, on the German side of the Czechoslovak frontier.

"The frontier is burning," proclaimed the Lokalanzeiger.

"Raging machine-gun fire opened on fugitives," cried Der Angriff, organ of Propaganda Minister Goebbels.

"Prague provokes an extremely serious situation," warned Borsenzeitung.

Official news agency reports asserted a band of Czechoslovaks fired on German customs officers near Seiderberg while a second Czechoslovak detachment crossed the German frontier.

Seventeen German guards were reported by D. N. B. to have been wounded when Czechoslovaks manned their machine guns for an hour.

Other similar border bloodshed was reported by the official agency at Langenbrueck, Seifhennersdorf and Hirschberg.

In Berlin a foreign office spokesman declared every Sudeten German killed during border incidents was being chalked up against the Czechoslovaks by Hitler.

The German press campaign for complete partition of Czechoslovakia was seen as another trend in rapidly moving events of Central Europe.

Full Partition Demanded

While only a few days ago newspapers limited themselves to discussing possible methods of lopping off the Sudeten regions from Czechoslovakia, now the press considers partition the only possible solution.

Seen through German eyes, Sudetenland already is Germany's indubitable heritage, the Czechoslovak region west of the Olsa River is Poland's and eastern Czechoslovakia, centering around Bratislava, is Hungary's.

There has been practically no discussion about what should happen to the Carpatho-Russians in far eastern Czechoslovakia, however, for Germany would oppose vigorously Soviet Russia's acquiring any influence over them.

The visit of Imredi and Von Kanya strengthened Hitler's hand. Close Hungarian-German relations already had been evidenced by Regent Horthy's state visit to Hitler, August 21 to 27.

At that time, the Hungarians seemed too astute to commit themselves fully to being Germany's "little brother." This belief was borne out when Hitler at Nuremberg gave high praise to both Italy and Japan, his allies in an anticommunist pact, but hardly mentioned Hungary or Horthy's visit.

But now that Prime Minister Chamberlain of Britain has flown to Berchtesgaden and has urged Czechoslovakia to give up her Germanic people to Hitler, the Hungarians seemed to think it the time to cast their lot more definitely with Nazi Germany.

Events among the Poles, too, seemed to strengthen his hand.

Violent anti-Czech demonstrations occurred last night at Katowice, and the Polish press constantly demands the cession of that corner of Silesia where Poles in Czechoslovakia still speak the mother tongue.

Polish press comment to that effect is widely reprinted in German newspapers.

Litvinov Tells Soviet's Stand at Geneva Today

Czechs' Moscow Envoys Confident of Support; Russia Expected to Denounce Paris, London

By the Associated Press.

Moscow (Wednesday), Sept. 21.—While Russia has maintained an official silence regarding her course, Czechoslovak circles here are confident the Soviet Union will not let the little republic down.

The Czechoslovak minister, Zdenek Fierlinger, told the Associated Press early today that there was not the slightest doubt that Moscow would live up to its treaty of mutual assistance with Czechoslovakia.

Rumania Bars Troops

(At Geneva Soviet Russia was reported to have offered help to Czechoslovakia if she chose to fight Germany, but Rumania was said to have refused permission for passage of Russian troops through her territory.)

Russia has a treaty with Czechoslovakia to give assistance if the little republic becomes the victim of unprovoked aggression, but only in the event France comes to her aid.

Although the government was silent, the Soviet press denounced, the Anglo-French plan to dismember Czechoslovakia as a new step toward world war disguised as a contribution to peace.

[Soviet Foreign Minister Maxim Litvinov will denounce Britain and France for their "sell-out" of Czechoslovakia in a "sensational" address to the Assembly of the League of Nations at 11 a. m. today (7 a. m., E. S. T.), the United Press reported from Geneva.]

Fears Hitler in Ukraine

[Litvinov,, it was said, will deliver "some of the hardest blows" of his fighting career.

[It was understood that Litvinov will demand a "showdown" between those nations "favoring collective security and the totalitarian powers."

[The Russians formally announced at Geneva yesterday, the United Press said, that they will not come to Czechoslovakia's aid unless France does likewise—which was tantamount to saying they will not come at all—and today, the United Press informant believed, Litvinov will go farther and demand to know if France and Britain plan a four-power pact with Germany and Italy, which would leave Russia isolated in both Europe and Asia.

[Litvinov will declare that Moscow is blameless in "casting Czechoslovakia to the wolves."

[He was represented as viewing the European situation as drifting toward "complete chaos" and feeling that Germany's absorption of the Sudeten German provinces of Czechoslovakia will be only a preliminary to establishment of German ascendancy over Rumania, Hungary and Bulgaria, which will bring Hitler's swastica to the Black Sea and the Soviet Ukraine, the United Press said.—Editor's note.]

Masks Replace Czech Child's Peace Study

Expert Who Admired School System of Little Republic Now Shakes Head

While four years ago Czechoslovakia's schools trained children in peace education—stressing harmony among the numerous minorities within the borders of the little nation—today those children are being taught how to wear gas masks and how to save themselves from annililation from the air.

International pacifism, war and peace, fraternitity, humanity, conditions of happy peaceful life—those were courses of study strongly emphasized in Czechoslovakia when Severin K. Turosienski, Office of Education — associate specialist in comparative education, United States Department of Interior, visited Czechoslovakia to obtain first-hand information on the Czech educational system.

"But, that was four years ago—in 1934," he said yesterday in his office at the new Interior Building.

Crisis Brings Changes

"Today the educational picture there is changing. What will be the outcome, what effect the present crisis will have upon Czechoslovakia's excellent educational system—no one knows. I certainly cannot say," he said.

Turosienski, a native of Poland, remarked ironically that when he was in Czechoslovakia the Czechs were laying stress upon giving "definite instruction on universal peace."

"In the lower schools children were being trained in peace education because so many minorities exisited within the borders of the nation," Turosienski said.

Saw No Militarism

"I did not observe the militaristic influence extending into the lower schools then as in Germany and Italy," he added.

With the reopening of schools now in progress in Czechoslovakia, as in the United States, Czech children are learning about the mechanics of war—results of which Turosienski refuses to predict. He expressed belief, however, that the Czechoslovakian educational system will undergo "extensive changes."

Turosienski's studies of the Czechoslovakian educational system were reported in a bulletin issued by the Office of Education, Department of Interior.

Sudeten Corps Mass to Meet Czech 'Attack'

Prague Tanks, Guns Ready to Assault Border Town, Nazi News Agency Says

By the United Press.

Seidenberg, German-Czechoslovak Frontier (Wednesday), Sept. 21.—Thousands of green-shirt soldiers of the Sudeten "Free Corps" were rushed into battle lines along the frontier early today when it was announced that Czech troops were preparing to attack with tanks and artillery.

A German announcement said that a "new attack" on this little bullet-pocked town straddling the frontier was anticipated, perhaps before dawn, and that consequences of such an attack will be "incalculable."

Seidenberg, 10 miles south of Goerlitz with Czechoslovakia on one side of its main street and Germany on the other, was the scene of an open battle early yesterday, fought with blazing machine guns after an alleged raid on German soil by a Czech military force.

17 in Hospitals.

Seventeen men were in hospitals today, two of them so seriously wounded that they may die, as a result of yesterday's fighting.

"On the German side all measures have been taken to repulse an expected large-scale attack," it was announced.

Czech tanks were reported to have been brought up to the battle-torn border and concealed in bushes and gulleys while the Czechoslovak army moved medium-caliber artillery into positions, purportedly to bombard German territory.

Czechs Dig In.

The official German news agency, D. N. B., said 1,000 Czech reinforcements had been rushed up and were digging in 500 yards across the frontier from Seidenberg, around the Czech town of Obersdorf.

The reinforcements were described as "Communist" troops whose headquarters are at Obersdorf.

The streets of the town were deserted, guests left hotels and hurried into the interior and only patrols of armed Germans and Sudetens were in evidence.

"The village is completely open to a Czechc attack because it lies within range of artillery and the concentrated (Czech. troops," the German announcement said.

Czechs Deny Violation

Nazis contended yesterday's battle resulted from an attempt by "several hundred men in Czech ramy uniforms" to "kidnap refugees from the Sudeten camp and force them to return to Czech soil.

The Czechoslovak government energetically denied that Czech troops had violated the frontier and asserted that, to the contrary, the fighting resulted from guerrilla raids of the Sudeten "Free Corps" across the border from Germany.

"In all these incidents in which customs guards and soldiers had to defend themselves, care was taken to see that no shots were fired into the German territory," the Prague radio station announced.

3,000 Held Ready

The D. N. B. quoted refugees fleeing across the border as saying that at least 2,000 Czech soldiers equipped with armored cars, heavy machine guns, tanks and artillery were massing a few hundred yeards inside Czechoslovakia's boundary.

"Czechs attack!" screamed German newspapers. "Brutal breach of peace! Frontier aflame!"

The German legation in Prague was instructed tonight to protest sharply against both clashes, alleging that the Czechs bore the blame in each instance.

It was announced officially that 102,000 Sudeten Germans have found refuge in Germany, including the 40,000 or more men armed and outfitted in the "Free Corps" of Konrad Henlein, party leader now a fugitive from Czech treason charges.

Policeman Freed in Death Of Suspect

Man Who Fled From Sobolewski Carried Stolen Groceries, Witnesses Tell Court

Policeman John E. Sobolewski was acquitted in District Court yesterday of killing a colored suspect who fled when the officer tried to question him.

"I'm mightily glad it came out this way," the rookie patrolman said. "The only thing I'm sorry for is that the bullet hit the man."

"I'm too happy to talk about it," said his wife, who was at his side throughout the two days of the trial.

Sobolewski stopped Wallace McKnight on Sunday morning, June 26, and asked what was in a bundle he was carrying. Instead of replying the man dropped the bundle and ran. Pursuing Sobolewski fired. He took the man to a hospital when he caught him and found him fatally wounded.

Government witnesses testified McKnight was carrying groceries stolen from his employers.

Unanimously chosen jury foreman was Mrs. Helen B. Mercier, of 1359 Jonquil street northwest.

"It was my first experience as a juror," she said after the verdict, "and I think it was one of the most interesting experiences I have ever had." Mrs. Mercier said the ten men and two women reached their decision in an hour and a half without serious disagreement.

Maryland U. Coeds Better Students Than the Men

University of Maryland coeds made higher scholastic averages last year than the male students, statistics compiled by Miss Alma H. Preinkert, registrar, revealed yesterday.

The average for all the coeds last year was 2.43 out of a possible four points. The men's average was 2.12.

Other facts revealed were that sorority girls get higher averages than nonsorority girls and also higher averages than fraternity men.

The average for sorority girls was 2.71 and for nonsorority girls, 2.36. Theh ighest rating sorority was Delta Delta Delta, with a record of 2.89, and the leading fraternity was Alpha Gamma Rho, with 2.50.

Fort Meade Troops Told They Equal Any Nation's

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Sept. 20 (AP).—Military maneuvers of the Third Corps Area ended late today in a sea of mud.

Maj. Gen. James K. Parsons, Corps Area commander, who issued a "cease firing" order at 3 p. m., a day ahead of schedule, said:

"Troops participating in this exercise were as well trained and well equipped as those of any nation."

Wet and weary, the 5,500 Infantrymen, Cavalrymen, Artillerymen, Engineers, Aviators and Medical Corps men squished back to their concrete floored tents tonight.

The end of the "war" for a mythical hoard of gold bullion on the Fort Meade Reservation came after the "Blue" army of 4,000 came within cannon fire of the vaults.

The "Red" defending army artillery succeeded in delaying invaders until most of the billion had theoretically been removed.

Colored Guards, Citizens Meet

A "get-together" of representatives of the Federation of Civic Associations, Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, D. C. N. G., and Company A, 372d Infantry, D. C. N. G., was held Monday at the armory of the skeletonized colored battalion at Twelfth and U streets northwest. There were company and platoon drills and a band concert under direction of Capt. R. E. Miller.

Gen. Cox voiced the hope that the guard unit might become the center of community interest in the immediate neighborhood of its armory. Col. West A. Hamilton asked Gen. Cox and his staff to interest themselves in measures to increase the unit to a full battalion. For the citizens' organization, Woolsey W. Hall indicated interest of the colored community in Col. Hamilton's plea.

Other speakers included Col. Charles A. Dravo, Lieut. Col. P. G. Nevitt, Maj. Sidney Morgan, Maj. Just C. Jensen, Maj. Fletcher T. Berndorf, Maj. W. F. Welch, Maj. William T. Roy and Capt. Hugh Everett, jr.

O'Connor Gets Slim Margin Over Fay

the Republican race with the backing generally of those party members who have been unceasingly active against the President. In his appearances before them he had stressed the President's opne political hostility to him.

Fay was certain of participating in the November election, since he already was assured the unopposed designation of the strongly pro-Roosevelt American labor party.

The Fay-O'Connor campaign ended last night in a crescendo of recriminations and epithets, with O'Connor raising a new claim that the President "might plunge this country into a world war" to assure himself a third term.

Fay Replies "Treason"

This atmosphere of bitterness persisted today, the Fay camp charging this afternoon that O'Connor men had flooded the district with spurious Communist "indorsements" of Fay in the hope that for him they would be the kiss of death.

As to O'Connor's war issue, Fay responded: "That is equivalent to accusing the President of the United States of treason."

So intense was interest in the Sixteenth District that almost overlooked was the fact that in the States as a whole there were hundreds of primary contests and that altogether 12 House members were facing opposition.

Voting upstate was apathetic.

Barbour Leads Pullen

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 20 (U.P.).—W. Warren Barbour, former United States Senator seeking Republican nomination again, took a strong early lead tonight in primary returns from scattered election districts, while George O. Pullen, of Trenton, Townsend plan advocate, was polling a weak vote.

Returns from 114 of New Jersey's 3,577 election districts, gave Barbour 4,341 and Pullen 278. E. Dan Coskey, perennial Republican candidate, trailed far behind.

William H. J. Ely, of Rutherford, former State Senator and until recently WPA administration in New Jersey, was unopposed for the Democratic nomination to the Senate.

Two-Suited Thief Nabbed by X-Ray Eye of Detective

The quick-change ability of an alleged purse-snatcher availed him little Monday night when he came under the X-ray gaze of First Precinct Detective James Kane.

After Elizabeth Seaton, of 102 E street northwest, reported that a young man had snatched her purse, containing $36, while she was walking near the Capitol Plaza fountain, Kane memorized her description of the thief, then set out to look around.

Seeing a furtive figure near the Capitol, Kane stopped him. The man answered the description all right—but he wore another color suit. Taken to the First Precinct, the man was found to be wearing two suits, with the loot from the woman's pocketbook concealed in the inside one. The purse was hidden on the Capitol grounds. Police, who said the man admitted the theft, held him for further investigation.

G. O. P. Upsets Wisconsin

Milwaukee, Sept. 20 (AP).—Close contests for the Republican Governorship and United States senatorial nominations developed tonight as early returns from the Wisconsin primary election showed the G. O. P. outstripping the La Follette Progressive Party in total vote.

The four Republicans seeking the nomination for governor polled an aggregate of 4,867 votes in the first 147 precincts of 2,994 in the State, to report. The Progressives received 3,709. The Democrats trailed with 1,652.

This indicated a remarkable reversal of recent Republican form. In the primary of 1934, the party was third in total votes. It stepped up to second place two years ago.

First reports tended to bear out the predictions of Progressive leaders that Gov. Philip F. La Follette, running for an unprecedented fourth term, would win renomination handily. The vote in 147 precincts: La Follette, 3,001; Glenn P. Turner, 708.

In the Republican contest, Robert K. Henry, coalition candidate, led Julius P. Heil, 2,010 to 1,993. James G. Peterson received 683 and Clun L. Miller 181.

Henry, candidate of La Follette foes in all parties, who contend the only way to beat the Governor is to consolidate his opposition, also was leading for the Democratic nomination. The 147 precincts gave: Henry, 624, Jerome F. Fox, organization candidate, 685, and Edward G. Ihlenfeldt, 143.

The Coalitionists hoped to nominate Henry on both tickets, assuring a two-man race in November. La Follette, a leader in organizing the Progressive Party of Wisconsin four years ago, and the prime mover in launching the National Progressives of America last spring, has been a minority winner in the last two elections. In those, he opposed both Democratic and Republican standard bearers.

Smith Calls Parley To Boost Cotton Aid

Myrtle Beach, S. C., Sept. 20 (AP)—Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, said yesterday he had telegraphed a number of Senators to meet at his office in Washington September 30 to discuss plans for concerted action to get better loans for cotton.

Smith, who has been vacationing here since renomination, said "farmers cannot get along" on the present rate of 8 cents a pound and that "something just has to be done." Senator Smith is chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee.

At a meeting yesterday between union leaders and the board of directors of the G. P. O. Cafeteria and Recreation Association, the latter delivered an ultimatum that cafeteria workers must return to their jobs before negotiations for a settlement of differences would begin.

The management also demanded that all points in dispute which could not be adjusted by negotiating committees should be referre dto a board of arbitration consisting of one person selected by the union, one by the management and one to be agreed upon mutually.

Russell H. Herrell, administrative assistant to Public Printer Augustus E. Giegengack, said the cafeteria would remain closed until the union showed a more conciliatory attitude.

"DEAK" JOHNSON goes "riding to hounds" whenever the drag season is on. But that doesn't make him a softy or snob. He indulges in this most vigorous of sports in order to keep fit.

"Deak" practices moderation in all things. When he works, the fur flies. But he doesn't OVER-work or OVER-eat. And when he drinks, he drinks with judgment. "Deak" is a man who cares.

Since the days when white wigs were formal instead of white ties, Carstairs has been a name of character to men who care. Such forthright men have always found their own kind of trustworthiness in whiskies sponsored by the Carstairs family.

The same trustworthiness is in the present day Carstairs Whiskey. A blend of fine whiskies, Carstairs is notably rich in flavor, yet light in body. A blend of the highest craftsmanship and character.

'Four Daughters' Stirs Many Warm Emotions

Fannie Hurst Story Is Converted Into Appealing Study of American Home; Sidelights on National Opening; 'March of Time' Banned; Notes

IT SEEMS to me I have read somewhere that "Four Daughters," the Warner Brothers picturization of Fannie Hurst's noval of "Sister Act," coming into the Earle Theater on Friday, is primarily notable for the simplicity of its homely story of American family life. Having viewed the picure for the first time yesterday afternoon, the impression persists that no story concerning itself with the divergent romanticisms of four spirited young women, all of marriageable age, can be completely transparent and uncomplicated, whether they be sisters or not.

BELL.

"Four Daughters" seems to these eyes and ears simple only in the small-town environment in which it is placed. In its plumbing of youthful and parental emotions, both gay and tragic, it is a pretty comprehensive and thorough survey of everything that can happen to a recognizable and lovable family to shake it out of the tranquility in which it is first discovered. Perhaps the word "simplicity" has been misused in the case of "Four Daughters" because little of the outside world is permitted to intrude upon the household of Adam Lemp, residing in the unpretentious little city of Briarwood, or whatever it was it was called. The emotional experiences of its principal figures are decidedly complex and, so, are prolific in sources of substantial and appealing drama.

The semblance of comfortable home life is created on the screen with admirable skill by a cast which uniquely, but not strangely, features its unknown members above its known. This, perhaps, is as it should be, for there are newcomers of great promise importantly assigned in this subject. It is, for example, Gale Page's best picture. She shares feminine honors with Priniscilla Lane, who is developing into an actress of considerable more authority than either of her sisters, Rosemary and Lola. And two new leading men, in the persons of John Garfield and Jeffrey Lynn, quite overshadow Frank McHugh and Dick Foran. There is no one in the ensemble, however, to overshadow either Claude Rains, as the father, or May Robson, his sister, presiding over the household of his motherless daughters.

One thing seems reasonably certain. "Four Daughters" is not restricted to any single type of audience for full appreciation. It cuts such a convincing cross section out of the middle of typical American life behind the walls of the average home that it cannot but prove equally impressive to both sophisticates and that legendary individual, the man in the street. It is an entertainment for every member of the family, of whatever age or gender.

Both Mr. Garfield and Mr. Lynn, I believe, are appearing professionally in Hollywood under at least partial pseudonyms. Before reaching the West Coast, Garfield's first name had been Jules. The films deemed that not quite American enough, so it was changed to John. Impressed with the logic of the argument, this former member of the stage cast of "Golden Boy" set about fiddling with the name of Garfield under his own power, but was reminded that there once was a President of the United States by that name and so Garfield might be considered sufficiently native for all practical purposes.

Mr. Lynn, one is led to believe, is of Scandinavian extraction with an original family name of Lind. Since Barnum's day, even that name has not been without luster in the minds of American audiences.

A late afternoon bulletin comes to hand from Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's Theater, as follows: "Marx Brothers in Broadway stage success, 'Room Service,' opens Thursday, September 22. Incidentally, picture is breaking all records in Chicago and we anticipate some records to go bust around the corner of Fifteenth and G streets."

From all grapevine report, this optimism is not ill-founded. The Marx Brothers—Groucho, Chico and Harpo—are reputedly at their funniest in a rigidly authentic transcription of the stage play, which they play "straight" in strict adherence to the prompt book of the original stage version.

Since the screen rights to this hit comedy cost somewhere in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars—give or take a dollar—fear has been expressed in some quarters that the picture never will get its investment back at the box office. This seems to me a bogus bugaboo. Ordinarily, a modest price is paid for a script and a prodigious sum expended on production. If "Room Service" is, in fact, a faithful transcription of the stage play to the screen, there would appear to be no possible way in which it could run up tremendous production budgets. The whole thing is set inside a hotel. So what RKO-Radio seems to have done is merely to reverse the usual process—transfer the burden of cost from production to script, thus achieving their finished product at no greater outlay than would be entailed in making any other picture of comparable amusement quality.

Anyhow, it opens tomorrow—and if it turns out to be a million dollar production, I have only been kidding!

Afterthoughts on the opening of the National Theater's new season, with Clara Boothe's comedy, "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," Monday night:

Miss Boothe is one contemporary playwright who has the courage not to pull her punches. Several of the principal characters in her frank and, at times, unchaste, farce are easily identifiable as actual figures in the public eye. In referring to others not embraced in the dramatis personae of the play, she names names from the President clear down the line to the most obscure of the aspirants for the role of Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With the Wind."

Helen Claire's parents, Col. and Mrs. Henry J. Rosenstihlen, of Union Springs, Ala., were members of Monday night's audience to see their daughter score a personal triumph in the role of Cindy Lou Bethany.

The National presented a spick-and-span appearance to the brilliant first-night audience after its thorough summer renovation.

The floor staff now wears a neat house uniform of deep blue with wine-colored trimmings. This is an exceedingly splendid idea. Dinner-coated members of the audience now can amble to their seats without being mistaken for ushers by strangers in town. Some of us, however, no doubt will continue to be mistaken for waiters when we drop into the foodery later for a spot of caviar and champagne.

The New York offices of the "March of Time" newsreel have been advised that the French government has withdrawn from cinema screens throughout France all copies of the latest "March of Time" release, "Prelude to Conquest," which deals with the present Czechoslovakian crisis.

The film had previously been approved by the Foreign Office and no reason was given at the Qua d'Orsay for the sudden reversal of the exhibition visa. Whether the ban was due to a changed viewpoint toward Czechoslovakia in official circles, or was the result of a protest from the German Embassy, a Foreign Office spokesman declined to reveal.

In England, where stricter censorship of films of a political nature is imposed, the "March of Time" reports that its Czechoslovakian sequence is being shown on schedule with approval of the British motion picture censor, who usually bans films which are controversial.

The film was released in this country about a fortnight ago and already has been shown in some 2,400 American picture theaters.

It is the expectation of Manager Jack Thoman and his associates in the operation of the Belasco Theater that when the Lafayette Square house is relighted tonight for first Washington presentations of "Moonlight Sonata," the first motion picture in which the world-famous pianist, Jan Ignace Paderewski ever has appeared, one of Washington's most distinguished first-night audiences will be in attendance. The invitation list bears a striking resemblance to an abbreviated edition of a Capital "Blue Book."

• • • •

Speaking of striking resemblances—and reverting just a mite—there were those in Monday night's audience at the National who were reminded of Margaret Sullavan's first appearance in Washington in "A Modern Virgin," at the Belasco many years ago, by Helen Claire's performance in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye." Only Miss Claire's was better.

What's-in-a-Name Note

Perhaps Miss Claire's first name should have been Ida!

Plays by Ear

Judy Garland, the singing starlet of "Listen, Darling," is one of the best piano players in Hollywood, yet cannot read a note of music. She memorizes melodies by listening to them.

Second in Color

Jeanette MacDonald appears for the second time in Technicolor in "Sweethearts," in which she co-stars with Nelson Eddy. Her first experience in the medium was in "The Vagabond King," with Dennis King.

A Great Virtuoso Makes His Screen Debut

IGNACE PADEREWSKI AND MARIE TEMPEST,

world famous pianist, composer and statesman, and one of the foremost actresses of the English stage, respectively, as they appear in "Moonlight Sonata," the Lothar Mendes screen production with which the Belasco Theater will reopen tonight. Charles Farrell also is a prominent member of the cast of this film, which marks Paderewski's first appearance before the cameras

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 20.—Went over to Warners Studio to interview John Garfield and ran smack into 30,000 Legionnaires and a dozen movie stars. Olivia de Havilland, Ann Sheridan, Bette Davis and the Lane sisters were being fought over. Discipline went with the wind. No one was hurt. A few necks strained from too much stretching. The Legion boys were wined, dined and beered and saw some pictures in the making . . . at least they thought they did. But I'll bet a cookie there wasn't one strip of film in the camera.

HEDDA HOPPER

A lot of good-will will come out of it, just as a lot of shouting went into it.

And cheers for Harry Warner's speech, who, among other things, said: "You've heard that communism is rampant in Hollywood. I tell you this industry has no sympathy with the isms and ologies of foreign governments, but collectively and as individual studios are doing all we can to sell the principle of true democracy to the outside world. And those who whisper that Hollywood is communistic, lie and know they're lying when they say it."

Following which, Garfield and I crept off to a quiet corner and whispered our interview.

Luise Rainer was having stocking trouble on the "Dramatic School" set. Each time she curled up like a kitten, another pair popped. She has put on 12 pounds and looks like the little girl who arrived here a few years ago. The picture will show incidents out of Luise's own life.

Paulette Goddard is beautiful in this picture, but it's a shame to start her as a meanie. In one of her scenes she said: "I give nothing, say nothing—that makes me glamorous and mysterious. The less you give, the more you get, believe me, I know."

Speeches like this get you little from fans, believe me, I know. You'll see some mighty pretty girls in this one. Three hundred were looked at—16 chosen. Lana Turner, Ann Rutherford and Mrs. Frank Orsatti are among the prettiest.

It looked as though "The Great Waltz" had turned into the great war. Fernand Gravet was handed a cablegram just before he took Meliza Korjus, a Viennese, in his arms and waltzed away. When scene was finished Lawrence Stallings walked in with latest extra—more war scare. Gravet's expression never changed. Stallings told me he'd been walking in a trance for days. His cable was preparing him for another which would arrive in code. He is terrified for his wife who is with his invalid mother, aged 82, who can't be moved, and her mother. The men servents have already gone to join their regiment. To show you what a state he's in, he made out a check for $3,000 instead of $30 and handed it to his chauffeur.

"The Great Waltz" which started so gayly months ago, has now become a monstrous dynamo, with war seared into his brain.

In "The Sisters" with Bettie Davis and Errol Flynn, Warners have another hit. It's interesting that one of the first shots discloses "Roosevelt for President" but it was Teddy way back in 1904. Now, 34 years later, a Roosevelt is still in the saddle.

Paul Whiteman and Sally Rand are doing their stuff at the county fair in Brockton, Mass., admist the cows, pigs and chickens.

Quite a sight seeing Cedric Gibbons, art director at Metro, who hasn't been on a skate for 20 years, kicking up his heels, loaded down with balloons and hanging on to a bevy of beauties—and he calls it work.

Now that Bill Powell will be ready for work in a few weeks, it's strange that the studio is talking about putting Melvyn Douglas opposite Myrna Loy in "The Thin Man." Can't see how they could manage that, because at end of the last one Myrna was going to have a baby. Good actor as he is, I still wouldn't care to see Melvyn Douglas the father of Bill Powell's child. Would you? But there's more to this than meets the eye.

Beery Takes Carol Ann on Plane Trip

When he completes "Stablemates," Wallace Beery and his 6-year-old adopted daughter, Carol Ann, plan a plane trip across the country.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star expects delivery on his new Howard plane soon.

They plan to stop at Fish River, Utah, for some trout fishing and then will continue across country to New York to do some sightseeing.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Sept. 20.

". . . and I don't think you ought to go to all those clubs, dear . . . What? . . . You don't like to go to night clubs? Oh, you have to—because it's work? . . . Okay, then—go ahead, if it's work. But mind you—don't let me catch you having a good time."

12 P. M. "Francis Ormond French, John Jacob Astor's father-in-law, has resumed negotiations to work at the Havana-Madrid," an agent reveals at the Paradise. "The manager told French that the place features rumba-music. 'So what good would I do for you, if I worked there?' French protested. 'After all—I can't rumba.'" . . . "Mrs. Heywood Broun," Eddy Duchin reports at Le Coq Rouge, "has an article in the current issue of 'Mrs.' Magazine—the same day she passed her literacy test for first voters in Conn." . . . "Although Robert Rice is the new drama critic for the Morning Telegraph," a reporter advises at Tony's, "he hasn't been invited to join the Critics Circle—which his father, Elmer Rice, attacked."

1 A. M. "Who knows?" Dick Merrill sighs at the Tavern. "I still may fly the ocean this year." . . . "Okay by me," Toby Wing, his fiancee, agrees. "Sure I'll let him fly" . . . "Some night," Ruth St. Denis confides at the Rainbow Room, "I'd like to come up here after everybody's gone, and do a sole dance" . . . When the newly-naturalized Lotte Lehman joins the dancers on the Ambassador floor, the music is switched from swing to a waltz. "Please, don't," the singer insists. "Go back to swing. If I'm to be an American citizen, I'd like to be 100 per cent" . . . "Mme. Tassaud's famous wax works in London," a Britisher informs at the St. Regis, "will be brought here for the fair" . . . Gene Mako, who will oppose Bromwich in the tennis nationals, enters the Onyx Club and discusses Bromwich's queer two-handed returns. "I'm good with two hands, too," Gene assures—and plays the drums in the band.

2 A. M. "Many made-in-Germany articles will be on that American relief ship for Spain," Henry Dunn declares at the Versailles. Some medical supply companies can't sell 'em, because of the boycott, and so soldiers wounded by German bombs will be healed with the aid of German supplies" . . . Tommy Farr, at the Cotton Club, watches 50 Creole showgirls rehearsing the "Boogie Woogie" number. Mike Jacobs, with whose camp Farr has broken, enters, nods curtly to Farr and seats himself across the room . . . At the Tokay, Ilona de Thury, 70-year-old soubrette, startles the custombers by singing "Old Man Mose" . . . "Alec Woollcott's niece," a student tips at The Famous Door, is writing the gossip column for the Swarthmore paper."

3 A. M. Jim Barton imitates Joe Frisco in the finale at the Casa Manana. "Frisco can't get a job," Barton is told, "so he's trying a new stunt—doing an imitation of you" . . . "I was just offered a mountain, and turned it down," Billy Rose states. "The producers of a Winter Ski festival near Bennington, Vt., wants me to stage it. A mountain full of snow—when even an ice-cube depresses me" . . . "When the movie companies heard that the American Legion would convene there," a film official relates at The Kretchma, "they decided to open one studio for the legionnaires. They drew lots, and Warner's opened its studios for them—because Warner's lost . . . "Well, I've got a movie job," Lois de Fee, 6-foot Amazon bouncer, relates at the 18 Club. "Metro is placing me in its stock company to learn how to act."

4 A. M. "No, John Montague, the golfer, hasn't disappeared," Bing Crosby assures at the Stork Club. "I saw him just before I left. He's just taking it easy" . . . "Robt. E. Sherwood and Maxwell Anderson of the new Playwrights group were discussing the question of having standees at their shows," Hildegarde reports at El Gaucho. "I don't like standees," Sherwood said. "They're disloyal. They're the first ones to fall off" . . . "The Frisco Fair ran a contest to determine the dullest statistic about the fair," Horace McMahon informs at the Kit Kat. "The winner wrote that the fair would run for 24,983,200 seconds—from February 18 to December 2. No wonder the winner would think of that. His envelope was postmarked 'Alcatraz.'"

5 A. M. Rubinoff is out of the hospital at last," a musician declares at Dave's Blue Room. "He'll convalesce at Rudy Vallee's camp." . . . "Yolande Ugarte, daughter of Hilda Ferguson, the Ziegfeld beauty, will work in my new cafe," N. T. G. reports at Lindy's. "I'm changing Yolande's name—to Hilda Ferguson" . . . "The fashion editor of Esquire called in his associates to work up a new word describing a flower worn in a buttonhole," a reporter relates. "They thought and thought and finally Publisher Weintraub said: "Why not stick to the good old-fashioned American word—boutonniere?'"

6 A. M. ". . . and George will be one year old this week . . . That reminds me, dear—if those people are still tapping our wire when you phone here, they'll hear his newest word, 'Da Da'."

Brakeman Blamed in Rail CrashKilling12

100 Injured; Hysterical Employe Cannot Tell Why He Broke Rule and Pulled Switch

By the Associated Press.

Niland, Calif., Sept. 20.—Railroad officials blamed a brakeman's mistake tonight for a collision of two Southern Pacific passenger trains that killed 12 persons and injured more than 100 early today.

C. F. Donnatin, Southern Pacific superintendent, said the wreck was caused by the sudden, unexplainable decision of Eric Leonard Jacobson, veteran brakeman, to throw a switch as the Argonaut, New Orleans-to-Los-Angeles flier, sped toward a siding where the Chicago-bound Californian, tourist train from Los Angeles, was waiting.

The Argonaut engineer saw the block signal arm rise, a red light flash. Brakes screeched, but the big locomotive veered sharply and plunged into the tourist train.

Donnatin said Jacobson was dazed and hysterical from the effect of a decision he could not explain. An important rule of the service, the superintendent said, is that when a train is on a siding, waiting for another to pass on single main line tracks, the brakeman must not approach nearer than 20 feet from the switch stand.

The dead: Florence A. Tator, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; Mrs. E. W. Hall, Loma Linda, Calif.; Mrs. G. A. Hall, Loma Linda; Robert N. Richardson, engineer of the Argonaut, Los Angeles; P. E. Martin, fireman, Californian, Los Angeles; H. R. Parsons, fireman of the Argonaut, Los Angeles; Mrs. Joe Sorrels, Tuscon, Ariz.; Miss Rylva Easter, Los Angeles; Mildred Greene, Kalamazoo, Mich., and two unidentified girls.

Both locomotives were smashed to smoudering piles of scrap metal, five coaches were overturned and 800 feet of track was ripped up. Scores were trapped in the forward coaches of the Californian, and acetylene torches were used to reach some of the bodies.

One of the survivors was the eight-months-old baby of Mrs. Sorrels. She was killed, but the infant was only slightly hurt.

W. Allen White Deals Labor And Capital 'Kick in Pants'

Business

sturdy copper intestitnes,—so long as we think in terms of lagging reaction, we are going to get smacked with the other side of the shield, which means the blistering biff of radicalism right where it will stimulate our mental processes"

Denounces Labor

Labor he denounced for becoming "class-conscious," and for attempting to "run the whole country" by using its organized power politically, as he declared that politically class-conscious labor "menaces the existing economic structure of American civilization."

He said flatly: "There can be no recovery so long as labor is politically class-conscious. The blessed Lord knows that capital has made its mistakes and is payinf for them, paying through the nose.

"But labor has been no Solomon . . . We shall have the class-conscious political worked trading his vote not for the immediate objective of wages, hours and working conditions, but for power for his political labor boss.

Foresees Reaction

"If labor insists upon maintaining its class lines of bitter intransigent hostility to all capital, the American middle class—old John Q. Public—will not support labor."

White's address was the highlight of an evening of analytical speeches on: "A Common Ground for Labor and Management," in which Robert J. Watt, American workers' delegate to the International Labor Office, and Lewis H. Brown, president, Johns-Manville Corporation, presented labor's and capital's views, respectively.

2,000 Attend

It concluded the second day's sessions of the five-day congress, attended by nearly 2,000 executives from 17 countries, after a day spent in exhaustive technical studies of problems of administration, personnel, production, distribution, distribution, management, agriculture and domestic management.

Watt demanded a more actual realization of the "polite platitudes about the partnership of capital and labor," saying that usualy by that phrase "industrialists refer to a partnership in which labor has a junior nonvoting stock on which dividends are paid very seldom and only when unavoidable." Declaring that "labor objects to being figured in just as an operating cost which must be sueezed down as low as possible," he asserted that capital can expect discipline and responsibility within labor unions "as soon as you stop waging war on labor unions." He struck at incorporation of unions as "just the child of hostile and ignorant scheming, just the ballyhoo of your own vicious propaganda."

Paradoxes Cited

Brown, in a temperate address defending management, predicted amendment of the national labor relations act to "correct its weaknesses when mutual confidence between labor and management replaces suspicion and distrist." In analyyzing misunderstandings between business and Government, Brown said: "We seek to have more by producing less; we strive to make money buy more by decreasing its value. We strive to create employment while pursuing relief policies that encourage idleness. We hold thrift a virtue and then set an example of profligate spending. The right hand of Government the left hand berates business for asks business to do something and doing it. Taxes take an ever-increasing proportion of business profits, yet industry is urged at the same time to put more men back to work."

But White's speech, refreshingly blunt, was the most heartily received of the day. In the discussion he represented the public—in the days of your youth when you were going to handle your own business in your own way and no man could come into your shop and tell you how to run it!"

His Cry of "Radical"

He reminded the audience that as far back as 1920 and every four years since, both Republican and Democratic platforms had called for laws authorizing the right of collective bargaining to all workers. But, he added, when anyone insisted that American workingmen deserved as much as Danish, Swedish or British workers had, the term "dangerous radical" was used. He continued:

"What you got when you silenced the voice of the American consumer demanding justice, was the C. I. O. and the labor racketeers and the sit-down strike encouraged by a smiling and distinguished gentleman who holds the Ace card in the political game. His lightest word of opprobrium for you enterprisers large and small in his quest for votse is 'economic royalists.'"

"Middle Class Will Win"

"But your friends were in power 20 years ago. And you chose to follow the path of reaction when the voices of the American people were calling for the establishment of genuine collective bargaining."

He then sailed into the long-standing business opposition to the "innocuous child labor amendment to the Constitution," reminding that Presidents Coolidge and Hoover had indorsed it, but that "you bosses went went raging into the State Legislatures and fought its passage."

In conclusion he stressed that "this is a middle class country and the middle class will have its will and way. For the middle class is the real owner of American industry." He asserted that the middle class in America today demanded a peace with justice between capital and labor, and emphasized its hope that this peace can be attained away from the ballot box.

Six Named To Solve U. S. Rail Worries

Rail

men and Enginemen.

B. M. Jewell, president of the railway employes department of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Roosevelt asked the six men to start work at once and to report back if possible in a month to six weeks. He suggested that despite importance of the wage issue, it was only one phase of a general rail and transportation problem that has become increasingly acute.

The President told the railroad and union executives he had hoped Congress last session would act on recommendations of interested agencies transmitted in his message. Although a last-minute attempt was made to enact emergency rail legislation, largely designed to provide employment for furloughed workers, the entire rail aid program became hopelessly snarled and died with adjournment.

This time, the President said, he is asking men who know more about rail and rail labor problems than anybody else to agree on the general problem and bring in recommendations for the new Congress to pass upon.

He said he called the conference because he felt the country was getting nowhere in efforts to establish a sounder railroad and transportation system.

It was learned that the union officials first had sought a conference on rail labor problems, and it was later decided to make the conference general and invite in both sides. Reports had been circulated in some quarters that the President would use this means to effect a settlement of the rail pay dispute, outside of the regular mediation machinery, but he declared yesterday he had no such intention.

Showdown October 1

As the wage conflict approached an October 1 showdown, the President last week called in Chairman William M. Leiserson, of the National Railway Mediation Board. Leiserson reported failure of the board's efforts in Chicago to bring about a voluntary settlement and discussed the alternative of a national emergency proclamation by the President and appointment of a fact-finding board, staving off possibility of either cut or walkout before December 1.

Apparently this course will be followed. The President's announcement of intention to name a fact-finding board next week presupposes a National Mediation Board recommendation that a state of emergency be proclaimed.

The emergency board, within 30 days of appointment, would report on the merits of the case, with recommendations. In all but one previous case in which this alternative was invoked a settlement has been effected.

Merely Submitted Proposals

The President's rail message went to Congress in mid-April. It carried no recommendations by Mr. Roosevelt himself, but transmitted the suggestions of a dozen leading authorities. Recommendations by the ICC included an emergency six-point program of financial aid and bankruptcy aids for the roads, and a four-point long-term program.

The long-term program never was seriously considered possible of enactment so late in the session. And the last-minute attempt to put through emergency aid was blocked by labor resentment at wage cut proposals still to the fore.

The Eastman - Splawn - Mahaffie long-term recommendations by the I. C. C. included a proposal for a Federal Transportation authority to "plan and promote action" by carriers to cut waste, and aid consolidation and co-ordination. Other long-term proposals included broadening of I. C. C. powers to permit pooling of earnings and traffic; investigation by the proposed F. T. A. of the transportation situation and investigation of railroad financial abuses.

ing of the bridge across the Potomac in this neighborhood."

Since the trip Secretary Ickes, as PWA Administrator, has indicated difficulty was being experienced in financing the State's portion of the cost of the bridges.

Told by a reporter Secretary Ickes appeared skeptical about the structures being erected in Maryland, Mr. Roosevelt asked "What bridges?"

A roar of laughter followed, whereupon the President, in serious manner, told the newsman the bridge article was purely a political newspaper story. Remarking that truth never catches up with what he termed the other thing, he volunteered to tell the story behind the projects.

Project Eliminated

Mr. Roosevelt said he long had been interested in getting a through line for traffic from Baltimore to Richmond. Senator George L. Radcliffe, of Maryland, had been one of those suggesting it.

This spring, the President continued, three applications for PWA funds for Maryland bridges had been received. One proposed structure was to span the Susquehanna at Havre de Grace, and one the Patapsco, while the third would cross the Potomac.

The three would have cost about $15,600,000, which the President said would run the allocations for Maryland far over that State's quota. He said he then talked with Gov. Harry W. Nice on his trip into southern Maryland, about cutting down the combined undertaking. The Governor agreed to elimination of the Patapsco project, thereby reducing the total cost to $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 for the two other bridges.

But the PWA deadline of October 1 for approval of new projects was rapidly approaching, Mr. Roosevelt pointed out, so Gov. Nice agreed to ascertain from Maryland bankers whether they would finance Maryland's share of the cost. The bankers, he went on, have turned down the proposal.

Woodring Approves Bridge

The President said that, of course, if Maryland did not supply her 55 per cent of the cost, the Federal Government could not put up the other 45 per cent, and in that event, the reporters were told, the amount still due to fill Maryland's PWA quota will be distributed among many local projects.

Meanwhile, Secretary of War Woodring said yesterday he had approved plans submitted by the Maryland Roads Commission from the Susquehanna bridge near Havre de Grace, Senator Tydings' home town.

$100,000,000 in Bills Sold by Treasury

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Morgenthau announced Monday the Treasury had sold $100,000,000 worth of 91-day Treasury bills at an average price of 99.973, equivalent to borrowing at .106 per cent.

The rate was fractionally nigher than last week's .103 per cent cost of short-term money. Last week's rate was twice as high as in preceding weeks, but the increase followed an $800,000,000 borrowing operation on long-term securities.

Wallace Would Speed Crop Loans

Aides of Secretary Wallace said Monday he favored speeding up the Administration's commodity loan program, especially for cotton and wheat.

Wallace, accompanied by Chairman Jesse Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Governor W. I. Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration, conferred during the day with President Roosevelt.

The secretary said "a credit problem" was discussed. Jones later said commodity loans were talked over.

Political Tax Collectors

Secretary Morgenthau has informed the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee, in effect, that he sees no reason to obey executive orders established to guide the administration of his department.

A standing order made by the President under the authority of the civil service act provides that non-classified Federal employes may not use their official positions to influence the results of an election. Despite that provision, M. Hampton Magruder, internal revenue collector at Baltimore, read a statement supporting the candidacy of Representative Lewis, in his fight with Senator Tydings, before a group of non-civil service employes under his jurisdiction.

The Campaign Expenditures Committee properly found that Mr. Magruder had violated the spirit of the civil service act. It referred the case to his superior, Secretary Morgenthau. The Secretary of the Treasury replies that he approved the Magruder statement and "the use he made of it as well." Apparently the order against political use of official positions means nothing in the Treasury Department. Mr. Morgenthau has left the door wide open for electioneering in a part of the Government service that should be scrupulously aloof from politics.

The underlying difficulty is the fact that positions of this sort are awarded as political plums. For the most part employes in the Bureau of Internal Revenue are now under Civil Service. Only the strategic positions of collector and deputy collector are left open to spoilsmen. With this set-up it is extremely difficult to keep tax collectors out of politics in any circumstances. With the Secretary of the Treasury approving political activity on the part of his subordinates, in disregard of executive orders, it becomes utterly impossible.

Several years ago a joint Senate and House committee estimated that the Government could save $1,000,000 per year by putting deputy collectors under civil service regulations. That statement was not merely a wild guess. It was based on a contrast of the record of political tax collectors with that of the same service when it was under the merit system prior to 1913.

This prospective saving and the additional safeguard against corruption provided by nonpartisan tax collecting machinery clearly point to the necessity of rescuing these positions once more from the spoils system. And the action of Secretary Morgenthau makes the case still more convincing.

Better Understanding

Before, during and since the World War certain historians have been obsessed by the belief that industrial magnates seeking for themselves and their associates larger fields for exploitation are chiefly if not wholly responsible for the international jealousies and hatreds that breed wars. Unquestionably the struggle for material gain has always been an important factor in upsetting world peace. At the present time the unequal distribution of the world's wealth in basic raw materials has increased a feeling of economic insecurity in certain countries which lies behind much of the rampant nationalism that has produced political disorders.

Nevertheless, there is abundant evidence to show that since the World War business, financial and labor leaders have been among the most active promoters of better understanding among industrial nations. On numerous occasions in various world capitals they have assembled from all parts of the globe to discuss their common problems and to emphasize the spiritual as well as the material value of encouraging friendly intercourse.

This week Washington is the meeting place of one of these important assemblages—the seventh International Management Congress. Despite the acute political crisis in Europe, representatives from 20 or more countries, including those in which conditions are most critical, have assembled to exchange views on management policies as well as on questions of administration and technique.

Willis H. Booth, honorary chairman of the congress, in his opening address asserted that "it is the task of management to work out harmonious and practical readjustments." "Upon the success of these efforts," he added, "the economic and political peace of the world depends." This is sound doctrine, but today it is not so easy as formerly to convince even reasonable men that economic co-operation among nations provides a sure foundation for political peace.

It is especially encouraging to have this doctrine voiced by many of the distinguished delegates who have come here to participate in the International Management Conference. A gathering of this kind, as George H. Davis of the United States Chamber of Commerce says, "made up of men and women occupying places of responsibility in business, engineering and research, is a force for the better understanding between nations; and this is one of the principal raw materials from which better international relationships will be fashioned."

In Need Of Overhauling

Washington ought to have the most efficient relief system of any city in the United States. In the States it is admittedly difficult to integrate the programs of Federal and local agencies so long as they are controlled by different officials and lack a central policy. But in the District there seems to be no excuse whatever for the unco-ordinated and wasteful system, or lack of system, still prevailing.

Relief agencies here present a picture that could well serve as a symbol of confusion. Instead of being welded together into a unified system serving the needs of the entire city, each separate agency is trying vainly to perform its own function with little reference to what other similar organizations are doing. The inevitable result is lost motion and inefficiency which lead to ineffective treatment of symptoms, while major efforts should be directed at the elimination of maladjustments which make relief necessary.

A family in desperate circumstances because its breadwinner has lost his job is all too frequently given the runaround. First, he may apply to the Public Assistance Division only to find that it has no funds to take on additional cases. No doubt he will also register with the Employment Center. Then he will try the WPA. Should he happen to be classed as unemployable, however, he must start a new tour of local agencies. At some point in making his rounds he is likely to call upon the Unemployment Compensation Commission to see if he is eligible for job insurance benefits. Finally he may be placed in the District rehabilitation service for training that will equip him for a new type of work.

In all this hit-or-miss wandering from one agency to another, however, a tremendous amount of time and energy is wasted. And it is not merely the time and energy of the applicant. Each agency has to repeat investigative work that might be performed by one centralized unemployment clinic. It would be a simple matter for such a clinic to look into the applicant's experience and his needs and refer him to the particular agency which could handle his case most effectively.

As Miss A. Patricia Morss, chief of the Child Welfare Division, recently pointed out, the present system results in gross discrimination against some families as well as inefficiency and waste in administration. WPA applies one yardstick to a family in want; the Public Assistance Division another, and the Child Welfare Division still a third. Such diverse standards inevitably lead to dissatisfaction. Citizens in need of relief have just as much right to expect fair treatment from their government as have those who are more fortunate.

Apparently the whole system needs overhauling. And the sooner that task is undertaken in Washington, where the Federal Government has full control, the easier it will be to bring about a clarification of national relief policy.

China's Envoys

The reported resignation of Dr. C. T. Wang will arouse genuine regret in Washington where, during his relatively brief tenure as Chinese Ambassador to the United States, he made a great host of friends.

China has always been fortunate in her envoys to this country. Uniformly men of distinction, they have all shown real ability in interpreting China to the United States and the United States to China. That was true of Dr. Wang's immediate predecessor, Dr. Alfred Sze. That was true of Dr. Wang himself. And there can be every expectation that it will also be true of Dr. Hu Shih, who is apparently slated for the ambassadorial post which Dr. Wang's resignation leaves vacant.

He, too, has the advantage of being thoroughly familiar with the Nation and people of the United States, an acquaintanceship going back to his student days at Cornell and Columbia nearly a quarter of a century ago. And he, too, like Drs. Sze and Wang, belongs to that remarkable group of scholars and statesmen who have done so much to transform China into a modern, united nation capable of resisting the fierce assault from Japan.

By profession a philosopher, Dr. Hu has many great distinctions to his credit. To him is attributed a large measure of the credit for China's literary revolution which brought about an intellectual renaissance in that ancient land. Dr. Hu was one of the first to use the popular tongue for literary works. A fearless and outspoken editor, an inspiring educator, a great mind, Dr. Hu represents the splendid fusing of the old tradition in China and the new.

The very real regret at Dr. Wang's impending departure will be tempered by the realization that the place he vacates will be so capably filled.

Protecting Civil Rights

The recently created committee on civil rights of the American Bar Association is discovering that it has undertaken a formidable task. Even before this committee was named, a group of young lawyers representing the Junior Bar Conference had found widespread evidence that the Bill of Rights is being violated. Now Grenville Clark, chairman of the committee on civil rights, contends that these isolated infractions are less serious than certain trends within the Government itself.

Jersey City has become a sort of symbol of arbitrary rule. According to the junior bar committee, however, many other cities forbid the distribution of handbills and pamphlets. Six New Jersey municipalities as well as Indianapolis, Buffalo, Syracuse, Mount Vernon, N. Y., Johnstown, Pa., and Wheeling W. Va., have ordinances that violate the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press.

The committee found evidence indicating that the right to freedom of speech has been frequently violated by the National Labor Relations Board. Likewise it brought into question various activities of the Senate Lobby Committee. Flagrant violations by employers using industrial espionage and by lawless groups set up to harass labor organizers were also reported. When these and other encroachments upon civil rights are added to a realistic view of conditions in Jersey City they constitute a discouraging commentary on present-day democracy.

Even more alarming, from the viewpoint of Mr. Clark, is the disintegration of civil liberties threatened by continued deficit financing, increasing centralization of governmental power and the "recently developed techniques for the artificial perpetuation in power of a government regime." The connection between civil liberties and the Government's record of unbalanced budgets for nine consecutive years may appear remote to some. Should this unwillingness of the Government to live within its means result in an emergency, however, it might, as Mr. Clark points out, be more destructive of civic rights than any isolated cases of arbitrary rule.

Certainly the tendency toward concentration of governmental powers makes the preservation of civil liberties more difficult. Governing powers were diffused in this country for the very purpose of making human rights the more secure. For the same purpose the authority of officials has been rather sharply limited. Whenever there is a tendency to disregard those limits, whether or not the immediate objective may seem desirable, civil liberties are threatened.

The new bar committee could not reasonably avoid these more profound aspects of the task it has undertaken. If its activities are to be effective, it must go to the source of present threats to that freedom of thought and expression on which our democracy is based. In taking this philosophical attitude, however, the committee ought not to overlook those numerous specific cases in which members of the bar can render aid to citizens whose civic rights appear to have been violated.

Justified Skepticism

Railway managements hoping for increased revenues from the rise in passenger coach fares reluctantly permitted by the ICC last July after an earlier denial of the roads' petition confess to disappointing results. It was generally admitted that the advance in fares was a doubtful experiment, but the right of the roads to test the possibility of obtaining needed revenues by an increase was clearly a prerogative of management that should have been permitted as a matter of course.

The failure of the increase to yield larger returns cannot, however, be interpreted at this juncture as evidence that the new rates were excessive. It appears that motor-bus companies and to some extent coastwise steamships have benefitted from the increase in rail fares by refusing to raise their rates correspondingly. The inevitable result has been a shift of passengers to these competing transportation lines.

While it is always hazardous to try to isolate the effect of any single factor upon the returns of the railways, it is evident from the present case that the rail carriers are severely handicapped in their efforts to adjust charges to revenue needs unless similar adjustments are forced upon competing motor carriers and water lines. In other words, without a unified system of regulation of our public carriers, rate changes become not only a highly uncertain source of revenue but a dangerous expedient.

Another reason why we long to be young again is because we knew so much then.

Why is it the person who has nothing to do always wants somebody help him to do it?

Disturbing Thought

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: Your Paris correspondent, John Elliott, in his dispatch calls our attention to a recent 19-hour flight from Berlin to New York by a Nazi airplane and points out the possibility of Washington soon becoming as vulnerable as London and Paris to attacks by Nazi and Fascist bombers.

This raises an interesting point in my mind which I would like to present to your readers. The 19-hour Berlin-New York flight was in a Nazi plane built of steel and aluminum and powered by oil. At some future time if a fleet of similarly built and powered bombers fly over Washington, their first objectives will certainly be the Capitol, White House, and the large buildings in the Federal Triangle.

Despite the self-assurance of our military that such a flight could be prevented, didn't a German submarine during the World War slip through the allied blockade and suddenly appear in Baltimore harbor?

Down on Pennsylvania avenue, among these Federal buildings, a fine new structure is rising which is intended to realize the dreams of a kindly old man whose last wish was for Washington to become an international center of culture.

Unless our Government and the combined efforts of our peace organizations are able to prevent another war involving America, it is entirely possible that this new building will never be used, and possibly never completed. It will surely be destroyed along with the other buildings which this old man dreamed about, planned, and worked so long to create. The destruction will be caused by machines of steel, aluminum and oil.

This new building, which is intended to become our proud center of culture, is being built with profits that came from the same sort of steel, aluminum and oil. A good deal of these profits were derived from the World War.

Will we see in the next war a situation where a desire for profit from war will be destroying the fruit of profits from the last war?

WORRIED.

Washington, Sept. 11.

Barbara Frietchie

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with interest the article in the Sunday Post by Hugh E. Martin, taken from the Kansas City Star, as to the verity of the Barbara Frietchie poem.

About 25 years ago I met at Mountain Lake Park a grandniece of Barbara Frietchie. I asked her about the poem. She said it was substantially or practically true; that some of the minor details were stressed. She said her aunt was sitting on her front porch as the troops passed, not standing at a window.

It is known, of course, that the entire poem is chiseled on the stone at Barbara's grave in the cemetery at Frederick. It is hardly thinkable that this would have been done if there had been no truth in the story. It is not possible that the poet could have created such an incident without some foundation in fact.

America And The Czech Crisis

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "I won't stick my neck out" is a phrase which I have heard often during the past few years from New Deal politicos, businessmen and others, to express their vague reasons for "sitting tight and doing nothing." To all of these people I heartily recommend that they read the very enlightening article in The Post of September 15, by Sonia Tomara, who traces the history of the Sudeten's affair.

Like nearly everyone else, I have sought in vain to learn from screaming headlines what this business was all about and Miss Tomara's article comes as a godsend to clear up a lot of muddled thinking induced by reading opinions by so-called "experts."

American people, in their eagerness to peep over the Atlantic fence to see what is going on in the neighbor's backyard, keep sticking their necks out farther and farther. Many of us now realize what happens when we permit our bankers and businessmen to stick their necks out too far. Twenty-four years ago the whole country stood by and permitted our profit-seekers to begin this business of "sticking necks out," until the whole country had to get involved in a European mess in order to save the necks of everyone in the country besides our bankers and industrialists.

In a period when profits are few and far between, and sound solutions for our economic problems are still in hiding, it becomes very easy for those with short memories or an ignorance of historical facts to image that Europe's troubles will help solve our own. The worse the European gets, the greater will be the efforts here to whip us into a frenzy of passions pro and con, over "democracy, autocracy, communism, fascism, jingoism, war-profitism," and every other excuse to drag us into the very thing we wish to avoid.

If as writer Tomara says, the German-Czech conflict has been going on for some 1,400 years off and on, isn't it reasonable to conclude that another war cannot settle what 1,400 years of intermittent warfare has failed to solve? It would be well for Americans to learn a lesson from the lowly turtle and not "stick our necks out too far."

Americans should resist with every bit of moral and mental strength they possess every propaganda effort to involve us in Europe's mess of political intrigue, persecution and putrefaction.

Appeals aimed at our pocketbook should be rejected from our minds as the lies which historical events have proven them to be. A 9-year depression, which we think is tough, will look like a picnic compared to the depression which will inevitably follow our becoming involved in another European war.

If America wants really to help European democracy and freedom, then let us try with all our might to put our own house so in order that Europe will come to her senses and try to follow our example. Even a monkey can be taught to use a gun or a bayonet, but only a human being can be taught to think his way out of trouble.

Wants No War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: a score of years ago, the United States went to war. Today the peace is again threatened and many people despairingly declare that our Nation could not remain out of a European war. May I ask why not?

Here at home we have enough natural resources to take care of every necessity and many luxuries. Citizens traveling in Europe at this time should be warned to leave at once or travel at their own risk; sale of goods to warring nations should be forbidden; if worst comes to worst, let the United States pay the losses of American industry abroad and have the employes return home.

Yes, I know this will cost money and will mean loss of trade, but will it be more costly than to send thousands of young men to sacrifice their lives needlessly and to have thousands return to live as invalids while the family they should be supporting is struggling for existence? Will it cost more than the billions of dollars spent during the World War? We can only answer that it certainly will not.

The United States does not have to go to war. Let us quiet the tongues of the propagandists who would have us enter war. Let the United States build up the Army and Navy to such strength as to make invasion not only highly improbable but also very nearly impossible. The United States must save the youth of the country to provide for her future government and protection from invasion.

Presidential Boom

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have subscribed to your paper in order to see what Dorothy Thompson writes. That woman has a head on her with an abundance of gray matter in it. If she is nominated for the presidency in 1940, I now second the nomination, and will vote for her, in case the District has that privilege then.

I wish we had had her in the White House in late years. She would not have tamely submitted to John L. Lewis's insulting intimation that he had practically bought the Presidency for her, and that she was in his debt. She would have given him to understand that the American Republic had not sunk to the low condition of the decadent Roman Empire when the Praetorian Guards put up the empire for sale to the highest bidder.

Nor would she have had to ponder the question whether it was "legal" for sit-down strikers to seize and hold property that was not theirs. And when she learned that striking pickets had actually held up delivery of United States mail until they—just think of that!—had decided what should be permitted to pass, I leave your readers to imagine what would have happened. My own guess is that there would have been some very decided "purging," and that unlike some other purging, hers would have been eminently successful.

"Our Jimmie"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the President's son James strips for the knife today, he is "Our Jimmie" to political friend and foe alike.

As he "goes under" party animosities are also put to sleep. The country, these 48 States, anxiously await his safe emergence and restoration to his family. Such is America.

The Founding Grandfathers

WHEN the Founding Fathers signed their names to the Constitution they thought they had something. And for 131 years, successive generations have wondered where they got it. But at last, the Iroquois Indians, who have kept their own counsel for a century and a half, have broken their long silence to solve the mystery. It was from them, they claim, that the august lawgivers borrowed the idea.

Strangely enough, the Indians who claim to be the originators of the idea are still an independent people, maintaining a separate nation-within-a-nation under their own laws. These, they insist, are the laws from which the Articles of Confederation and finally the Constitution sprung.

Beyond doubt, the similarity is striking. The main difference would seem to be the absence in the Constitution of aboriginal dramatic effects which the dignified signers could scarcely have condoned. Otherwise, the organization of the League of the Six Nations was not far different from our own central government. Their "capitol" was called a "long-house", and the council chamber was divided, the Mohawks and the Oneidas occupying the east end of the Senecas, Cayugas and Tuscororas occupying the west end.

The Onondagas, who were the best politicians, had joined the league only after it was agreed that only an Onandaga could be the "Keeper of the Council Fire" . . . the presiding officer who occupied the center of the hall. During a session of the council, he kept the council fire burning and extinguished it to close the meeting, usually at his own discretion—a kind of primitive cloture.

Questions of state were proposed from either end of the hall or by the Onondaga "speaker". Members of each group then discussed the matter among themselves. The Mohawk chieftain, as the "majority leader" or spokesman of the east end, reported the decision of that body and the Seneca chieftain made the announcement of the decision of the west end. In case of disagreement there was a general debate between the two sides. The "speaker" had the privilege of casting the deciding vote in the case of a tie. He also had the power of veto.

In the selection of their representatives, however, the six tribes of the Iroquois were several jumps ahead of the fathers of the Constitution of the United States. They provided for woman suffrage. Each tribe was divided into clans and each clan was allowed a certain number of chieftains in proportion to the number of members in the clan. These chiefs were chosen by the clan mothers (the oldest woman in the clan and her sisters). If the chieftain didn't listen to the clan mothers' advice on how he should vote it was within their power to remove him from office.

This provision of impeachment in the Iroquois constitution was called "dehorning." An erring chief was dehorned in an impressive ceremony and the new chief was crowned with the horned headdress. At the council meetings a head chief and a war chief were selected. In time of war the war chief was supreme.

Provision was made for referenda, a procedure which was customary when the question arose as to the advisability of adopting other tribes into the confederacy. The Tuscaroras being an "adopted" tribe, one of the Six Nation's "possessions," they were allowed only one representative who had no vote and no voice in the deliberations. They were sponsored by the Senecas and all Tuscarora matters had to be presented before the council by Seneca chiefs.

At the close of the Revolutionary war, George Washington sent Timothy Pickering and Benjamin Franklin to sit in council with the Six Nations to study these methods whereby six tribes, each a distinct political unit, were yet governed and controlled by a central government. Robert Morris, too, was a frequent visitor at the council meetings. Franklin and Morris reported to the delegates assembled at Philadelphia and eventually signed the document which was to be the Constitution of the United States.

A treaty was then signed with the Six Nations whereby the Iroquois confederacy was to remain a separate and distinct country, with a government which would be supreme within the boundaries of the reservation. Thus the Iroquois are today, a nation within a nation. Their Constitution is written into the State laws of the State of New York. They elect their own council and officers, make their own laws and conduct their own probate and civil courts.

In addition to a president and the councillors, the Indian nation elects three "peacemakers," an office which has been omitted or perhaps just lost in the shuffle of the government of the United States.

Our nation which gives so much honor to the framers of the Constitution of the United States, might also give a thought at least to those early Americans whose Constitutional form of government was powerful a full generation before the first white man arrived, and who in a way might be called the Founding Grandfathers.

Cold-Blooded Job

THE PRACTICAL TRUTH of Hitler's invasion o Czechoslovakia, which began three years ago, is this: Hitler is not interested in the Sudeten Germans but in the territory which they inhabit. If his heart were wrung by any sufferings of expatriated and captive Germans his first concern would be the tortured captives in that part of old Austria which now lies in Northern Italy. These people have suffered real persecution.

If Hitler's interest were humane and not territorial he would have encouraged the Sudetens to leave Czechoslovakia and make their homes in Germany. Such a mass emigration would involve some loss through the forced sale of possesions, but the loss would not be comparable to that suffered by the minorities in which the Reich and who are forced to leave all their possesions behind when they find opportunity to flee. In the matter of the persecution of minorities, Hitler has nothing to learn. He wrote the book.

KONRAD HENLEIN was assigned to promote treason in Czechoslovakia, and has done a thorough, practical, cold-blooded job. He made frequent trips into Germany to report progress and receive further instructions.

And the German propaganda department, by a clumsy error, sent a memorandum to all foreign press correspondents at the Olympic games at Garmisch-Partenkirchen in the winter of 1936 urging them to take photographs of Henlein sitting with Hitler and otherwise to "make propaganda" or the program of treason against a land whose athletes at that very moment were performing on the ice before Hitler and their traitor fellow-countryman.

THIS MEMORANDUM was intended only for German correspondents, but a dumkopf in the press department muffed his instructions and called upon Americans and others in the press gallery to abet a treacherous conspiracy, promoted under the white banner of international sport. Hitler and Henlein even then were aiming guns at the hearts of the Olympic boys and girls from Czechoslovakia.

If any minority in Germany had undertaken to do as Henlein has done in Czechoslovakia, Hitler would have slaughtered both leaders and followers without pretense of a trial. Czechoslovakia, however, patiently endured Henlein's backstabbing. Hitler has filled graves and torture camps with minorities whose dissent was merely passive. Henlein, on the other hand, has distributed weapons and drilled troops to await a day when Hitler would order them to betray their country to him.

• • • •

THE SUDETENS never have been persecuted in the Hitlerian sense of the word, and, moreover, if the persecution of members of his blood were Hitler's trouble he would have gone to the rescue of the Austrians in Italy long before this. But, for the time being at least, they have been yielded to their captors under Hitler's "perpetual promise" to Mussolini.

It is purely a business arrangement. He has sold those "blood brothers" into slavery for a price.

The Germans organized and carried out the assassination of Chancellor Dollfuss in Austria, but met unexpected resistance and backed off to drench the country with propaganda by air and press until finally the Austrians were too weak to resist. Dr. Schuschnigg, the head of the legal Austrian government, is now a prisoner, awaiting the constitution of a "special court." This court will find him guilty of treason against the invader—a new crime.

THE NAZIS are spreading out to absorb and dominate Europe toward the east, and the Sudeten conquest simply happens to be the next step in the plan. There are areas in Poland with an equal demand on Hitler's humane sympathies. But, taking things in order as they come, he is engaged now in conquering a strong natural line of military defense and seizing the rich territory just beyond it by indirect methods.

The Sudeten area never was a part of Germany and contains many inhabitants whose fate as a minority in Hitler's hands has been written in blood on every page of Nazi history. This same fate could well await American minorities in every area containing a settlement of Nazis, including, no doubt, sections of New York City, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Hoboken.

Churches In Captivity

By Ewart E. Turner

(1) Confessional Protestants Vs. Nazis

[EDITOR'S NOTE: The Czech crisis has overshadowed internal development in Germany, particularly the religious situation. Has the struggle between the Nazis and the Protestant and Catholic Churches ceased? What is happening to the Catholic Church in Austria? What is the present position of the Jews in Greater Germany? Do the Nazis intend to build up a pagan movement to replace Christianity?

[The Rev. Dr. Ewart Edmund Turner, former pastor of the American Church in Berlin, has just returned from a tour of investigation throughout the Third Reich. In an attempt to obtain answers to these and other important questions he interviewed numerous Protestant and Catholic Church officials, Jewish leaders, Nazi chieftains and Germans in the street. Dr. Turner presents his conclusions in a series of four articles, of which this is the first.

[Dr. Turner occupied the pulpit of the American Church in Berlin just at the time Hitler came to power. He has written and lectured extensively on the religious situation in Germany and is known throughout America as a keen student of German conditions.]

PASTOR MARTIN NIEMOELLER, Hitler's most famous prisoner, is in gradually failing health at Concentration Camp Sachsenhausen.

Recently, an attack of intestinal grippe further undermined his physical condition, and its influence is noticeable on his mental and spiritual condition. Complete isolation from human contacts is a principal reason for what might be termed his social malnutrition.

Niemoeller is allowed one visit monthly from his wife and one child. Ordinarily, this would mean that he could see his family every seven months, since he has seven children. Since January, however, he has requested not to see his children, it being more than he can bear. On August 22 the Secret Police gave his brother, Wilhelm Niemoeller, permission to accompany Frau Niemoeller on her monthly visits. Wilhelm Niemoeller is also a pastor and is a leading figure in the confessional church in Germany.

Concentration Camp Sachsenhausen is situated at Oranienburg, a town 15 miles north of Berlin. When Frau Niemoeller visits her husband it is not at the concentration camp, but at Alexanderplatz, the police headquarters in Berlin. Pastor Niemoeller is brought from Oranienburg by car, a monthly break in the prison monotony to which he looks forward.

The family of Niemoeller and the leaders of the confessional church have been doing everything possible to secure his release. So far as they can learn, the only condition on which the former submarine commander could be released would be for him to pledge to leave the Christian ministry. This he refuses to do. It is conceivable that these terms might be moderated at a later date.

A SINGLE but significant Scriptural reference has been sent from the concentration camp by Pastor Niemoeller to his faithful wife. He merely wrote in one letter: "II. Kor. 4:16." This proves to be a verse from Corinthians which reads: "Wherefore we faint not; but though our outward man is decaying, yet our inward man is renewed day by day."

There is no question but that the incarceration of the famous war-hero pastor has brought to a sharp focus the danger to Christianity which the totalitarian Third Reich implies. Before Niemoeller's imprisonment he was the subject of criticism by the moderate wing of the confessional church. Today these same pastors speak with positive appreciation of his heroic stand and they affirm their theological unity with him. In other words, the radical and moderate wings of the confessional church are more united today than at any time since Hitler's rise. Niemoeller's incarceration is the reason for this new unity.

One additional pastor is at present in a concentration camp. He is Pfarrer Schneider of Dickenschied in the Rhineland. He was interned for refusing Holy Communion to a number of parishioners, including several Nazi party members. The third confessional churchman now in a conentration camp is a layman, Herr Rocke, from Goldenstedt in Oldenburg. Rocke has been interned since May 29, 1938.

Pfarrer Lucking, of Dortmund, and five laymen are, according to latest reports, in detention awaiting trial. Nine pastors are under arrest in addition to the above. Pfarrer Volkmar Schultze, of Ropsen, has been unfrocked by the German Christian Church government of Thuringia.

• • • •

THE CONFESSIONAL CHURCH is greatly handicapped by the fact that thus far 77 pastors and church officials have been suspended from office by state authority.

There are 49 pastors who have been forbidden by the state to enter the parishes to which the church has assigned them. But most crippling of all are the national speech prohibitions (Redeverbote). Recent information states that 41 leaders of the confessional church are now forbidden to preach in public. Some of these are pastors who may preach in their parishes but not elsewhere. But others are the finest executives of the Protestant church in Germany, men like Asmussen, Kunneth, and Otto Dibelius, who have no opportunity of preaching the Gospel in the land of Martin Luther.

Church leaders anticipate a bitter struggle this winter over the control of church finances. Of the twenty-six church districts in Germany, twenty-two already have state-appointed finance commissioners. The majority of these commissioners are men openly hostile to organized Christianity.

The state-appointed commissioner for Mark Brandenburg is Von Schmidt, a former storm-troop brigade leader. He is one of the most important of the finance commissioners in Germany since Berlin is in Mark Brandenburg. This summer a delegation of citizens from the town Netzbruch came to protest against his withholding the salary of their pastor. Von Schmidt pointed out that the pastor was an outspoken confessional pastor. One member of the delegation, a farmer, replied that the citizens of Netzbruch paid this money and they should have some say as to what kind of Gospel is preached in their town; they wanted only real Christian doctrine, with no modern adulterations. Von Schmidt accused the confessional pastors of misleading the people and added the threat that the state would soon open a campaign against the confessional church by withholding the money collected through church taxation.

THE FORMER State church of Germany is today divided into two camps, the German Christians who want to national-socialize Christianity and the confessional church which stands on the historic Christian faith or confession. Although the German Christians have less than 3,000 pastors among the 17,000 Protestant pastors in Germany, they have the sympathy of the Nazi party organization and hence can bring political force to bear within the church administration.

The majority of the parishes in Prussia, for example, are in the confessional wing. Yet because of political pressure exerted in the farcical elections of 1933 and 1934 the majority of these Prussian churches have German Christian official boards locally. These local church officials seek to direct the parish collections into German Christian channels even though there are only a handful of German Christians in the whole parish.

This summer I visited one such church in Prussia. The pastor read the stated announcement for the official collections which was to be taken at the door following the benediction; he added, "If you can give with your conscience, do so." Then the pastor announced the sale of some pamphlets at 5 pfennigs each. "You have read them already, but you can give them to your friends," he said. The regular collection, sacked by the German Christians, netted less than 5 marks, but the sale of 20 pamphlets at 5 pfennigs each netted nearly 50 marks. Thus the German church carried on.

Obituary For Europe

TO WRITE WITH calm about the news that broke on Monday in London is almost impossible, but calm is needed to consider that news and to review as many of its implications as it is possible to envisage.

One can, of course, make a general statement no less true because it is sweeping.

On Monday the prime minister of Great Britain and the prime minister of France announced to the world that, in order to prevent their own territories from being possibly invaded by a vast Nazi army, and above all by a vast Nazi air force, they had decided to throw the last democratic republic east of the Rhine into the jaws of the Nazis.

In doing so, France broke a solemnly given pledge, reiterated time and again within the very last few weeks. In doing so Great Britain cut herself loose from a republic of which she herself was one of the prime architects.

BUT THIS is not by any means the worst aspect of what has happened.

Great Britain could, from the beginning, have withheld herself from the whole matter.

She could silently have decided that she stood for isolation from the problems of Europe east of the Rhine. She could have left the matter to her ally, France, let France, who was definitely committed, take the lead and abided by the results.

Instead, Great Britain took the lead and sent the Runciman commission to Czechoslovakia. Czechoslovakia, when that commission arrived to "make peace," was an extremely strong state, with a centralized government.

Lord Runciman persuaded the Czechoslovak government greatly to weaken that state by making concessions to the minority groups which would decentralize the government.

• • • •

THE CZECHS MADE those concessions, all of them except one, for the sake of "conciliating Hitler" and keeping the peace of Europe. The one which they refused to make they were advised against even by the Times, of London—namely, the right of the Germans to set up a Nazi state inside Czechoslovakia.

They were even prepared to negotiate further until Henlein, on German soil, offered them an ultimatum.

All the concessions were made to show good will toward Great Britain and to prevent Czechoslovakia's allies from having to go to war to save her. It was known, it was announced, that Lord Runciman believed these were all the concessions which any national state could decently be asked to make.

• • • •

A WEEK AGO these British recommendations were rejected by Hitler—that is to say by the head of an outside state.

And now Great Britain took up the ultimatum from Hitler without even consulting Czechoslovakia, and France, her ally, permitted Great Britain to do so, and even collaborated.

And Great Britain and France, on behalf of Czechoslovakia, though by no means delegated to do so by her, accepted the ultimatum.

And with this goes the last vestige of law in Europe, the last shred of prestige of either Great Britain or France, the last hope of settling anything by negotiation, compromise, treaty and law, or by anything whatsoever except sheer brute force.

And with it goes the last shred of respect for what calls itself "democracy," but what had plainly degenerated into sheer personal government inside the so-called democratic great powers.

For who instructed Mr. Chamberlain to go to Berchtesgaden? Who instructed him to embark upon a course which would prove to be irrevocable? Under whose orders was he turning all Europe either over to fascism or over to revolution and war, or a combination of the last two?

UNDER WHOSE instructions was he personally dissolving the League of Nations?

Not only did France and Britain desert Czechoslovakia but they weakened her for defense in advance; they encouraged her to delay; they undermined the authority of her leaders at home—undermined it, because what Czech today believes that Mr. Benes and Mr. Hodza were wise in trusting to the good will and honorable intentions of France and Britain?

And now, finally, they have even broken down her moral case! They have put her in the position where, in the mind of hundreds of thousands of people, naturally ignorant of Czechoslovakia and of Central Europe, she, and not Germany, will be considered the aggressor!

Not only have they assassinated her but they have besmirched her character!

CZECHOSLOVAKIA never had a propaganda ministry until last week. In all the years that I have been a journalist I have never received a single piece of literature unsolicited from the Czech government! But I know Czechoslovakia as I know every country in Europe where there is a German minority.

And in succeeding articles I shall try to present the accurate facts—for the record.

But this is not all, nor is it even, in the wide view, the most important thing.

Great Britain and France, by their action, have aligned themselves on the side of the racial theories of Hitler, against the conception of national sovereignty for which Britain has consistently stood and for which she must stand for sheer self-preservation.

The implications are appalling! First of all, Hitler's doctrine threatens with disintergration every small state where there is a German population, or any other racial minority—Switzerland, Belgium, Denmark, Poland, among the first; Rumania, Yugoslavia, among the second.

AND THE BRITISH and French empires? The doctrine applied to Czechoslovakia by the British will flare in Arabia and in Morocco, and throughout all the colonies of both empires!

Germany will rule from the north to the Black Sea—rule with her mobilized "nation in arms," her concentration camps, her arbitrary law, her barter policy, which makes her a parasite upon the whole world economy and its chief underminer. And that is not all.

• • • •

THE VERY THING that Britain has tried to stem—the awful ideological war, with all its accompaniments of civil strife and revolution—has now been let loose! The one thing that could have prevented a horrible confict between fascism and communism inside all countries was the unquestioned honor, prestige, wisdom and courage of the great democracies. The great democracies today are worth nothing whatsoever in the minds of the common people of the world.

If it is possible to halt the internal disintegration of France that will be a miracle.

NOR SHALL WE escape the inexorable effects of what has happened.

The United States this morning is totally isolated. But it has fascism rampant on its Southern frontiers, and that fascism, enormously strengthened by victory, will become more virulent. A totally victorious European fascism, or European civil strife between ideologists, will have repercussions here.

And if we are to remain a democracy we will have to make the most heroic, intelligent and united efforts to achieve the fullest sense of responsibility, the greatest democratic discipline and inner collaboration of all elements and the deepest sense and appreciation of our communal existence.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

"President" Roosevelt Talks It Over With "Leader" Roosevelt

President Roosevelt—Well, we all make mistakes.

Leader Roosevelt—Why the "we"? It was your idea, as President, to apply the purge as party leader.

President Roosevelt—Not at all. You, as party leader thought it better to invade those States than to have it appear to be me.

Leader Roosevelt—Have it your own way. Anyhow, you're certainly let out on a limb.

President Roosevelt—There you go getting mixed up again. You're the one out on the limb, not I. Just try to keep that idea straight. We are two distinct personalities. You know what a dual personality is, do you not?

Leader Roosevelt—Whether I do or not, the voters didn't find it very intelligible.

President Roosevelt—What was the final score, anyhow?

Leader Roosevelt—Nine to nothing. It was a shutout. We didn't take a game. Must I keep reminding you that I wasn't even playing?

Leader Roosevelt—That's what you think.

President Roosevelt—Well, I still feel that as President I am unscathed. If anybody got hurt, it was you.

Leader Roosevelt—What do you mean by "if anybody was hurt?" You know very well we were both hurt. Your bruises are visible to everybody.

President Roosevelt—You mean your bruises.

Leader Roosevelt (sadly)—If you . . . I mean, if I . . . or rather if we had never poked your nose, or rather our nose . . .

President Roosevelt—Your nose. Leader Roosevelt—Our nose into those primaries, everything would have been O. K.

President Roosevelt—Once more I must remind you that I never interfered in a single State. It was you and you only.

Leader Roosevelt—The voters never got the fine distinction.

President Roosevelt—I won't argue with you. Its all over and you will have to make the best of it.

Leader Roosevelt—So will you.

President Roosevelt—I hated to have to say this, but you have forced me to it. I have decided as President to release you.

Leader Roosevelt—By George, you can't do that!

President Roosevelt—Don't mention that name George to me!

Summer's End

The summer gently mellows to a close,
The subtly changing leaves
Still hang upon the trees,
And over all a softened sunlight glows.
No melancholy breath
Of sad decay or death
Shadows this happy hour of fulfillment;
But, toil of harvest past,
Nature can pause at last

Brinning Steinbeck

"THE LONG VALLEY" (Viking, $2.50) is a sort of sample room of John Steinbeck.

Here is one story of a halfwit, "Johnnybear," which will remind you at once of "Of Mice and Men" and of William Faulkner. Here is a raw lynching story, and a picture of two young Communists waiting for the mob they know is on their trail, which are somewhat in the mood of "In Dubious Battle." Here are two sketches of paisanos, echoes rather of the "Pastures of Heaven" than of "Tortilla Flat." Here is the ribald "St. Katy the Virgin," privately printed some years ago, but never put on sale. Here are three or four less successful studies of more sophisticated people, which I suspect were written long ago. And here are the famous Jody stories, "The Red Pony," published in a limited edition last spring, and a new Jody story, never before printed anywhere, and as good as anything John Steinbeck has ever written, suggestive, possibly of the mood in which he is writing his new novel.

"Why do I have to listen to it?" Carl Tifiin cried out angrily at breakfast, tired of his father-in-law's endless stories of the crossing of the plains. "That time's done. Why can't he forget it, now it's done? Why does he have to tell them over and over. He came across the plains. All right. Now it's finished! Nobody wants to hear about it over and over!"

CARL DID NOT KNOW that his father-in-law had opened the door, and was listening. Jody knew—Jody, then 10-year-old boy who was Grandpa's only eager audience. Later, sitting tired in the sun, Grandpa talked to Jody. It wasn't just the stories, he said; he wanted people to feel those westering days. Every man wanted something for himself in those days, he said; but the big beast that was all of them together wanted only to move on, westward. "The westering was as big as God," he said, "and the slow steps that made the movement piled up and piled up until the continent was crossed." Now "there's no place to go. There's the ocean to stop them. There's a line of old men along the shore hating the ocean because it stopped them . . . Westering has died out of the people. Westering isn't a hunger any more. It's all done. Your father is right. It is finished."

But still the wanderers fill the roads of the West, some of them hardly aware that they are hungry. And some of them, squatting in their California valleys, are caught up in some quick mob as John Steinbeck tells of in "The Vigilante," help drag a man from jail and burn him, and go home with a light in their eyes which makes their wives look up and say, "You think I can't tell by the look on your face that you've been with a woman?"

John Steinbeck can pack into a few paragraphs what many novelists stretch out over a whole book. Sometimes, I think, he packs almost too much. There is an almost climactic monotony in some of these sultry, slow-moving, dry-country stories which suddenly break out in a cyclonic last paragraph; it becomes, in the weakest of them, almost a trick.

The Jody stories are almost miraculously good. No one, I think, has ever caught the ecstasy of a small boy with his first horse more movingly; beside "The Gift," even Lincoln Steffens' story of his small-boy passion for a pony seems long-winded and amateurish. In "The Great Mountains" and "The Leader of the People" Mr. Steinbeck maintains with rare precision the balance of a small boy's intuitions—the uncanny insights into an old man's mind, the decent unspoiled sympathies, and the utter unawarenesses which go with these.

"ST. KATY THE VIRGIN" is a ribald, blasphemous story of a pig who became a saint. It might have been born in France in the days of Romain Rolland's "Colas Breugnon;" it grew obviously, out of whispered stories told at paisano campfires in the half-Mexican uplands of Monterey County, Calif., where John Steinbeck grew up.

That is a violent and beautiful country. These are, more than half of them, violent stories, and all of them beautiful stories. John Steinbeck has some strange affinity for violence, but he is never lost in it. There is always a warm sunshine in the background; and such an understanding of the simple belly satisfactions of life as crops out in the four simple satisfying pages here called "Breakfast."

Gen. Wood Sees War Peril Over

Baltimore, Sept. 20 (AP).—Brig. Gen. Robert E. Wood of Chicago, a veteran of the Spanish-American and World Wars, serving as acting quartermaster general in the latter, said today "I believe the danger of a European war in the immediate future has been removed and that business in this country will now improve."

Gen. Wood, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., here for the opening of a new store, added "conditions had been steadily improving until this threat of war. I think the improvement will now be resumed and that it will continue through to next spring."

A Formidable Gap

By Ernest K. Lindley

Huge Foreign Credit in U. S.

THE EUROPEAN CRISIS has turned several of the best minds in the Administration to the problem of closing a huge gap in our economic defense against involvement in a war abroad. That gap is the presence in the United States of approximately nine billion dollars of foreign purchasing power in the form of bank balances, foreign-owned American securities, and direct investments. Of this vast aggregate of purchasing power, it is estimated that approximately two-thirds are held by Great Britain, her dominions, allies, and economic affiliates among smaller neutral nations.

The avoidance of a war has been widely recognized as extremely important, if not indispensable, to keeping the United States at peace. Two of the provisions of the neutrality act were intended to prevent the growth of a great American economic stake in a foreign war. These were the embargo on the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and the ban on credits and loans to a nation at war. In laying down these restrictions, Congress was moved by the experience of 1915-17, when a swelling tide of prosperity was created by war orders from the allies. That boom could be maintained only by loans to the allies, which in turn gave us a greater economic interest in their success. We had to keep on lending them money or else precipitate a major depression at home.

MANY SUPPORTERS of the neutrality act assumed that a ban on credits and loans would be adequate protection against the growth of another unmanageable war boom, with its dangers to our own peace. This assumption had been encouraged by the pleas of various nations that they could not obtain dollar exchange with which to pay their debts to us and by the explanations of our own leaders of public opinion that the United States is now a creditor nation whereas at the outset of the Great War it was a debtor nation. In the net, the United States is a creditor nation: our investments and deposits abroad are greater than foreign investments and deposits in the United States. But in absolute figures, foreign investments and deposits in this country are greater than ever before in our history.

In 1914, although the United States was a net debtor foreign investments in this contry aggreated only four and one-half billion dollars, according to the commonly-used estimate. During the World War about one-half of these were sold to American citizens. Others were posted as collateral for the private credits and loans which preceded our entry into the World War. During the first three quarters of 1916, the sale to American citizens of foreign-owned investments in the United States provided more than one-third of all the revenue used to buy war supplies in this country. During the war, the British Treasury mobilized directly one and one-half million dollars worth of American securities owned by British investors. It sold about two-thirds of them in the United States and used the rest for collateral.

DURING THE WORLD WAR, the principal belligerents were slow in assembling and using the foreign investments of their nationals. The British began by paying small bonuses to insurance companies, investment trusts and individuals who lent or sold their American securities to the British Treasury. Later they put discriminatory taxes on specific securities which were not turned over to the Treasury. Finally they commandered all the British-owned foreign securities which they wished to use in prosecution of the war. France, Germany, and Austria-Hungary adopted similar measures—the latter two nations relying largely on Dutch bankers to sell their security holdings abroad.

German and Italian holdings in the United States are negligible. It is asumed here that if the big European war comes, the British and French governments will immediately take into their own hands major portions of the investments and bank deposits of their nationals in the United States. They could obtain control almost instantly of the holdings of banks, insurance companies, and investment trust. The investments and deposits at their disposal in the United States are perhaps twice as great as in 1914. Wholly apart from further gold shipments, they have ample potential purchasing power to give various American industries a vigorous upturn, which in time might well reach boom proportions.

THE UNITED STATES is so badly in need of an economic tonic that the business to be had from serving as a major supply base for another European war may be extremely hard to turn down. It cannot be rejected completely without inviting a repetition of the sequence of 1915-17. Once a war boom has been started by Europe buying from abroad, a ban on credits and loans cannot be expected to stand. If the war is lost the economic auction on the neutrality is likely to be too strong to be resisted. At the best, our dependence of judgment would be mortgaged.

With such thoughts in mind, experts in the Administration are considering ways of regulating the flow of war supplies to Europe so that the United States can steer its course between the dangers of a war depression and the even greater dangers of building its economic future on the quicksands of a European war.

The Federal Diary

CORRIDOR COCKTAILS: Three floors above Agriculture Department offices where learned scientists are conspiring against the starling, a fine specimen of the bird has chiseled its way behind a wire screen that was nailed along the rear of a classic column to keep the starlings out. The bird sits there, cooly at home, disdainful of the conspiracy against its kind.

It probably reflects on the undoing of scientists in the last starling conspiracy; they built a trap, you will recall, and set it in a propitious place. The starlings flew in, ate the bait and the trap failed to work. So, full of choice food, the starlings flew out, cackling impudently. But the battle isn't over, as soon may be seen.

Give the Government credit. It has waged a never-say-die fight. Not so long ago, they even suggested that we solve the problem by eating all the starlings. The suggestion was embodied in a learned publication, which pointed out that the starling is a fair dish, excepting the fact that the meat has a "rather strong, gamy flavor."

When the breasts of these birds have been soaked in a soda-salt solution for 12 hours and then parboiled in water, which is afterward discarded, they may be used in a meat pie that compares fairly well with one made of blackbirds or English sparrows, they will tell you. But—as you begin to shudder at thoughts of starling on toast—they wil remind that this proposed solution of the problem needn't be taken too seriously.

ONE OF the most amazing things heard in the corridors is the story of the baldheaded newcomer to the Government who has been almost totally bald since the age of 17! It wasn't caused by fever; rather he attributes his shiny dome to showerbaths in which, in early years, he doted. And terribly bothersome was the handicap of it during high school days: a crack half back, the opposing teams invariably cried, "What are you trying to do, bring in those old men against us!" On several occasions he couldn't play.

THE ARCTIC BLASTS have hemmed in William Zimmerman, who went to Alaska to investigate "shocking" conditions Secretary Ickes found there. Word comes that Zimmerman is "held up by the weather at Nome," but a report, soon to be divulged, has come . . . John D. Erwin, Minister to Honduras, and Mrs. Erwin have just arrived from Saratoga, N. Y., where the Spa was enjoyed. They're off, shortly, for Honduras . . . Uncle Sam's territorial and South American officials spend much time here and one, Gov. Lawrence Cramer, of the Virgin Islands, deplores the fact that 50 per cent of his duty is in the States. "The reason?" he asks. "Why the weather, of course; just compare the weather here and there . . ."

AND ISN'T it life that in one agency the boss and his colored messenger took a bar exam simultaneously and the messenger passed while the boss flunked! The messenger, we hear, is going to practice law; the boss is going to Europe.

POPULAR EDNESS WILKINS, of Treasury, is back from a motor trip to her home in Wyoming. She hands us two sage thoughts when you're out in the big West your perspective changes—things are so much more peaceful that you wonder why you ever were so disturbed over all the stewing of juices in Washington. The country is so big out there; you seem so far from bothers and the bothers seem so insignificant. Also, people had better begin to know that those bears in Yelloystone Park are wild bears and not the zoo kind, she thinks . . . On well-earned vacations are Bob Monahan, of Forestry (he starred on the skiis for Dartmouth), and Ned Burns, of Interior Building)

Cut Calories, Boost Vitamins In Reducing

Mayo Experiment Slices Food to 500 a Day, but Patients Do Not Complain of Hunger

By Ida Jean Kain.

MORE GOOD dispositions are ruined by a lack of vitamins than by a lack of calories. . . . And if your diet does not support your disposition, it does not safeguard your health. The best protection for both is in a diet that is optimum, not one that is merely adequate.

Ordinarily, it is no special trick to secure the vitamins, minerals and protein making up the optimum diet in the form of food. This becomes more difficult, however, as the menus are restricted on a reducing diet. For example, the very low calorie diet is necessarily limited in fats, which contain the essential Vitamins A and D, and in the breads and cereals which are the richest sources of the equally essential Vitamin B.

One of the most interesting dietary experiments ever conducted was at the famous Mayo Clinic. The calorie intake of the reducers was cut to 600 and even to 500 calories per day, and concentrates used to supply the highly important minerals and vitamins in optimum amounts.

Vitamin Comfort

These reducers lost as much as four pounds a week, with no depressing effects. They didn't even complain of hunger! In an account of the experiments, it was recorded that the reducers did not notice the fatigue, irritability or nervousness which might be expected to occur on such low calorie diets—strongly indicating that these discomforts may sometimes be attributed to the inadequate supply of vitamins and minerals.

In these experiments the daily diet was reinforced with concentrates as follows: Vitamin A and D were given in codliver oil. (It was suggested, however, that one capsule of a preparation of halibut oil with viosterol would be equally effective.) The calcium and phosphorous were supplied in calcium phosphate in the amounts of two level teaspoonfuls daily. Six Vitamin B yeast tablets were given daily. As a source of Vitamin C, citrus fruits and tomatoes or cabbage were given daily.

The diet itself contained the optimum amount of protein—70 grams being used daily, together with 12 grams of fat, and 40 grams of carbohydrates.

You should not, of course, attempt such a rigorous diet on your own initiative. Any reducing program of this kind should be carried on only at a clinic, or under the direction of your physician. The diet is included at the end of today's article. If you follow it, be sure to supplement the menus with the vitamin and mineral concentrates.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Sept. 20.

IF YOU will kindly put on your poke bonnet and stroll fabulous Broadway with me this afternoon, we'll see sights that remind us that the theater, battered as it is by talkies and radio, the pretty persons of thousands of fetching girl children who pound its pavements each September and sit in managers' waiting rooms hoping for one of the few jobs that are going.

ALICE HUGHES.

At this gay time of the year, Broadway and its side streets suddenly, almost miraculously, bloom with pretty girls, trotting along on their silly high heels, carrying the tiny dressing case that holds their rehearsal clothes. This fall, for instance, about a dozen musical shows are plotted or already in rehearsal, and girls from all parts of the country turn up on the street of high hopes and heartbreaks. They still look on Times Square as the first and most important step on the long and thorny road to Hollywood.

And how many of the ambitious thousands will really get jobs this fall? Probably no more than 300 in the musical comedy choruses, and perhaps 150 more in night club lines, or as check or cigarette girls. For the rest, it will be hope deferred, or utterly smashed. The fortunate ones will be introduced to the strange half-happy, half-sinister world of New York after dark—dated, perhaps, by well-heeled young playboys, but in most cases "going steady" with young trap-drummers or sax-tottlers whose hours are about the same, meeting at Reuben's or Dave's Blue Room for an after-show snack, talking the strange jargon of the show shops, learning the fundamentals of brushing off the men whose attentions aren't welcome.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN— The perennial and irrepressible Gertrude Atherton is at it again—this time with a provocative tome called "Can Women be Gentlemen," a collection of peppery essays. What a woman! You'll want to read this, because you'll all have answers for Gertie. . .

Stenographer in Probational Job So Fearful of Failure That Work Is Suffering; Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am very worried and don't know how to solve my problem. I am a stenographer in a probational job, with six months to make good. During the first month my work showed steady, slow improvement. Then I was taken off stenographic work and put to addressing envelopes, which had to be done. Then the Labor Day week-end intervened: the week following I alternated between stenography and envelope addressing and then I was out sick one day. Since then my work has been miserable.

I've worried myself sick this past week for fear of failing. I'm on my own in the world and it's up to me to make good on this job. If I fail, I'm through; I might as well call quits. Nowadays, when I take dictation I am nervous; my hand jerks and I lack mental and manual co-ordination. I make mistakes in typewriting; constant chatter, rattling papers and loud voices in the office grate on my nerves, and it seems impossible for me to do perfect work.

I went to school the first month on the job but could not afford to keep up the tuition, but night school will start soon, which may help some. I have been devoting most of my lunch hours to my work, also worked overtime one Saturday and came early one morning to get more work out. The quiet office with no voices and no hustle and bustle was heavenly and I got a great deal more done and felt very tranquil. But, of course, you can't ask for or expect perfect quiet in a busy office during working hours.

I have been practicing at home the past two weeks. I have made, for shorthand practice, a glossary of the most-used paragraphs, words, phrases, titles, ets., and use this, in addition to my manual, for shorthand practice. But I have so much to do and so little time for practice, what with laundry, ironing, letters, etc. Reading for self-improvement, though highly necessary, is an almost unheard-of luxury.

However, here is my real problem: Twice in the last week, my dictator dictated certain phrases which I heard clearly and put down in plain shorthand (thinking at the time, "That's the first time she's given that phrase that twist.") Later she brought the letters back and said I must have changed them, as she never said that. Now she blames me, completely (though silently) convinced in her mind that she never said it. Yet I know she did. I like her very much, but any argument or any conflict of wills (even unspoken) upsets me; and I was so worried that I cried over the episodes after I got home. I felt justifiably angry, too, because in these instances, at least, I was in the right.

What is a stenographer's defense in such a case? I don't want her to be angry at me, so I have tacitly let her think I was in the wrong, although I was right. But if I continue to do so, she will think I am dumb. And when you add such a supposition to my miserable work of the past two weeks——. Well, you see why I am perturbed. Of course, I have four months yet in which to make good; but if this feeling of uneasiness persists and my work doesn't show rapid improvement, I fear for the results. I try not to be nervous; to take things easily; to be tranquil; but in spite of myself, I get on edge as the day progresses. Momentarily, my perspective is completely maladjusted and I can't seem to get back to normal. Can you help me? Please answer soon.

ANXIOUS.

A Simple Remedy

DEAR ANXIOUS: Your trouble seems to be nervous tension growing out of physical exhaustion. You no doubt need more sleep and rest, more outdoor exercise, and more recreation and relaxation than you have been getting. I believe if you were to cut out the tedious home work for a while, get the office completely off your mind after working hours, spend one to two hours out of doors each day—either early morning or early evening, or both—get an average of 10 hours' sleep a night for a week, 10 days or two weeks; and go dancing of week-ends, or see a movie occasionally, that you would find yourself making an amazing come-back. I think you would find your stenographic speed and accuracy improving as if by magic.

As for your silent quarrel with your superior concerning the authorship of the offending phrases—forget it. Granted that she authored them and later disavowed them—such incidents are all in the day's work for even the most seasoned secretaries, save only those who have so trained their psychic sixth sense as to be able to read the boss' mind and know what he means to say, even when he fails to say it in so many words.

Seventy-five per cent, at least, of all intelligent, conscientious, successful secretaries accept it as their combined privilege and responsibility to polish their boss' verbiage into acceptable form—and sometimes in process of polishing they guess right, and again they guess wrong; and not only have to do it over, but get a bawling-out for their initial well-meant (and sometimes necessary) efforts.

The really intelligent secretary doesn't expect (or ask) justice in small things of her immediate superior. She studies his temperament; adjusts to his temper and idiosyncracies; gets to know him better, actually, than he knows himself; and proceeds thereafter to defend, protect, serve, humor and outsmart him to his own advantage, as the occasion and his professional and temperamental needs seem to require. In his eyes, her brains and capabilities are commensurate, wholly and solely, with the degree of her indispensability to him and his affairs. And he appreciates her all the more if he finds her enough of a diplomat to be willing, cheerfully, to take the rap for a trifling mistake, rather than make a fuss about it. If she's in the right, he knows it—and that's the all-important thing; to be right. The most stupid thing you could do, in the situation, would be to argue the point, or sulk in injured silence.

Scotch Touch Noted in Hats At Paris Salons

Of course, Erik wouldn't go so far as to call a tam a tam; it's always a beret, perhaps modified, to a Frenchman! But tam it is. And

Body Cell Degeneration Is Fundamental Process

By Dr. Logan Clendenning.

This week we are discussing the fundamental scientific aspects of the changes that occur in the human body in disease. As scientists we are trying to arrive at the truth, no matter where it leads us. We are not necessarily trying to say anything comforting or to assure ourselves that there is a cure for all our ills, but to look at life with a completely unprejudiced eye, as if we were not ourselves concerned in it all.

Yesterday we discussed the fundamental process of inflammation, and we saw that it was essentially protective to the body. Today we will discuss another process that occurs which is not protective but destructive—the degeneration of body cells.

When a group of cells degenerates in a single area this defect can often be replaced. It depends upon what kind of cells are involved. Certain kinds of cells can never be replaced—nerve cells are the best example of this. When a nerve cell is completely destroyed, as in infantile paralysis, it can never be replaced.

There may be some apparent exceptions to this, but they are only apparent. Nerve fibrils may be destroyed and then replaced by an outgrowth of new fibrils from the central nerve cell, but when the cell itself is destroyed it is never replaced.

Skin cells, bone cells connective tissue cells, on the other hand, replace themselves very readily. In the internal organs, what looks like a very good repair job can be done by having connective tissue take the place of destroyed tissue. Thus in the heart, when one of the small blood vessels gets plugged up and shuts off the supply of blood to some part of the heart muscle, (coronary thrombosis, as often reported in the newspapers), that part may degenerate, but if it is given time connective tissue fills in, and the heart as a whole continues to function pretty well.

One of Season's First Big Parties Marks 13th Birthday of Siam's King

Returning Vacationers Make Reception at Legation Seem Like a Washington 'Old-Home Week'

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

A BOY FROM BANGKOK finishing his studies in Lausanne, Switzerland, reaches his thirteenth birthday . . . and Washington society turns out to celebrate. The excuse is good enough; the party—among the first big ones of the season—draws its quota fro mofficial, diplomatic and residential circles . . . and everyone seems happy that the social whirl at last has started.

That, in a few words, was the reception yesterday afternoon at the Siamese Legation in celebration of the birthday of his majesty, King Ananda Mahidol, Siam's boy sovereign. From 5 to 7 o'clock, the cozy legation at 2300 Kalorama road was the scene of a gathering that had several earmarks of old-home week. Friends who hadn't seen each other since before vacation time greeted each other effusively, and whether anyone remembered just why the party was being given seemed of slight consequence.

Standing at the door of the drawing room, the smiling minister and his attractive wife shook hands with dozens of guests who climbed the crimson-carpeted stairway and lingered long and happily. Mme. Rajamaitri was a stunning figure in a sheath-like rock of dusty pink crepe slit up the front and set off with a narrow gold belt, gold sandals and an orchid corsage. But attractive as the slim hostess was, her plump little daughter, 4-year-old Didi, got most of the attention during the first half of the party.

ALTHOUGH SHE DID not stand with her parents the entire time, Didi did her part toward receiving the guests. Time and again she curtsied and smiled and seemed more than annoyed when her nurse took her way to supper. Her jonquil dimity dress was embroidered in cerise and blue flowers and a cerise ribbon around her black hair matched her sash.

IN THE CROWD were representatives of all Washington social circles. From each embassy and legation there was at least one staff member. Since the party of the French Embassy was at the same hour, most of the diplomats appeared at both events.

Mme. Hirosi Saito, who recently returned from a summer's vacation at Hot Springs, was the first arrival, but others came along quickly. The Turkish Ambassador, Mehmet Munir Ertegun, Mr. and Mrs. T. Sim Lee, Dr. Hans Thomsen, Charge d'Affaires of the German Embassy, and Paulo G. Hasslocher, of the Brazilian Embassy, were among those who were there during the first hour.

Mrs. William E. Borah, who recently returned to Washington, was another who arrived early. Her black and white dotted satin frock was fashioned with a cape and worn with a small black hat. Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Houghteling were among others glimpsed there; also, Mrs. Francis B. Saye; the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos; Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Dion Williams, Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Bohn, Mme. Peter, wife of the Swiss Minister, who was smart in a simple black outfit with white accents; the Minister of Finland, Eero Jarnefelt, who said Mme. Jarnefelt would return next month.

Since Didi centered the spotlight so successfully, there were some who weren't quite sure just whose birthday celebration it was. "Isn't it lovely," gurgled one fur-swathed dowager, "that the child is having such a nice party on her birthday!" Others there were, however, who were better informed, and no end of guests wandering through the library, where champagne was served, spotted the boy king's picture on the wall and called attention to it.

While there was whispered mention, here and there, of the European situation, the latter for the most part seemed to be forgotten. It did, that is, until the Charge d'Affaires of Czechoslovakia, Dr. Karel Brejska, put in an appearance. But even he seemed to be in a gay, partying mood, and the European problem again shifted to the background.

* * * *

STILL OTHERS there were Mrs. Emil Hurja, wearing a handsome silver fox jacket over a navy wool dress and a dark "doll hat," with a veil; Mrs. William Niller with her debutate daughter, Miss Houston Niller; Col. and Mrs. Joseph Cecil and their daughter, Miss Caroline Cecil, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem with their daughter, Miss Eleanor Meem, who wore a handsome burgundy frock with a towering hat to match and a brown fur neckpiece.

Also, Capt. and Mrs. Herbert Seymonr Howard, Vice Admiral Robert Witthoeft-Emden and his bride, who was attractively turned out in a soft green suit trimmed in brown beaver with a small hat to match; the Counselor of the Argentine Embassy, Hector Ghiraldo and his pretty wife; Mrs. Justin Miller, who was accompanied by her son, Merrill Miller; Miss Carolyn Chantry, Mrs. Walter Wyatt with her daughter, Miss Laura Belle Wyatt; Mrs. Thad Brown, Mr. and Mrs. John McClure, Mrs. Abner Drury, Mrs. Louise Schapiro, who was accompanied by her son, Dr. Mark Schapiro; Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Britten, and Mrs. Thomas Burke, who was making her first party appearance for several months, having only recently recovered from an operation.

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

The Dark Shadow.

Of all the shadows that appear,
The darkest shadow's made by fear. —Old Mother Nature.

There are all sorts of shadows. Some are light. Some are deep and dark. Some are friendly and always welcome. Some are threatening and cause fright. But of all the shadows none is blacker and more to be dreaded than that made by fear.

All the smaller people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows are constantly on the watch for shadows. The friendly shadows hide them and are much beloved. The dangerous shadows are dreaded, for out of them may came sudden death. So these are constantly watched for. Now there are shadows that we see and there are shadows that we cannot see but that we feel. These are the shadows made by sorrow and distress and unhappiness and fear, and none is darker than the one made by fear.

It was a beautiful morning and nowhere was there greater contentment and happiness than in the big slough where Jerry Muskrat and Mrs. Jerry had made their new home. They had a lot of neighbors gathered at their end of the pond this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Black Duck and their seven grown children were there, some of them idly floating in the open water out in front of the Muskrat house. Some were preening their feathers and some in among the rushes were tipping up and searching for seeds in the mud of the bottom. Crowbill the Coot and Mrs. Crowbill were swimming about and now and then diving They are fine divers are the Crowbills.

Mrs. Jerry was idly floating just in front of the house. A short distance away on a little mud landing that he had built sat Jerry eating the tender heart from a cattail plant that he had cut and brought there. Sora the Rail was running about in marshy places looking for a breakfast.

Down at the other end of the pond Longlegs the Great Blue Heron was standing. He was motionless. With the patience of the true fisherman he was waiting for his breakfast to come within reach of that spearlike bill of his. Being solitary by nature, with a preference for his own company and none other, he had not joined the neighborly gathering at the other end of the pond.

Nowhere in all the Great World was there a happier, more peaceful and contented scene than in the big slough that beautiful morning. The only shadows were the friendly shadows made by fleecy white clouds drifting overhead.

Then in the distance sounded the voice of Blacky the Crow. "Caw, caw!" cried Blacky.

The Ducks, who were swimming about stopped swimming and sat still with their heads held high. Crowbill, Mrs. Crowbill and Mrs. Jerry floated without motion. Jerry stopped eating. Sora the Rail stopped running about. Down at the other end of the pond Longlegs stretched to his full height and turned to look back over the meadows. All were listening. All knew the meaning of that distant call of Blacky's. It was a warning to all who might hear. He had seen an enemy. All knew that. But what enemy?

By and by they saw Blacky coming toward them. At first he was merely a black speck in the sky. Just before he reached the pond Longlegs flapped upward. "Quawk!" cried Longlegs as he flew overhead and then turned toward the Big River.

"Caw, saw, saw!" cried Blaky, passing over a minute later.

Then all knew. Longlegs would have taken to his wings for the approach of but one enemy—Man. Blacky would have given a warning in just that way for none other. The shadow made by great fear settled over the big slough. Man might mean a hunter with a terrible gun. The Ducks and Crowbills swam in among the rushes and scattered there, each seeking to be well hidden. Sora the Rail squatted down partly under some fallen brown rushes. Jerry Muskrat dived, striking the water sharply with his tail as a warning of danger to any who might not already be aware that possible danger was coming. Mrs. Jerry also dived. They swam to the tunnel that led to the entrance to their house, entered it and a moment later were in their house snug and safe.

Md. Cat Adopts Squirrel, Load Of New Worries

Prince Frederick, Md., Sept. 20 (AP).—A flying squirrel has been adopted by Becky, a tabby belonging to Sarah Gray and the cat appears to be in a continuous dither over its antics.

The squirrel was placed with Becky's two kittens by Miss Gray when their mother was out for an airing. When Becky returned, she gazed at the squirrel, reflected a moment and gave him a bath before introducing him into the family circle.

Since then the squirrel has deserted his adopted family frequently for a flying visit to trees while Becky looks on in amazement, but the animal returns for a quiet evening at home with Becky.

Pension Rules Are Outlined For Arlington

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST,
Clarendon, Va., Tel. OXford 0509

Outlining provisions of the old-age pension as set up by acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, James P. Moody, superintendent of public health for Arlington County yesterday said persons over 65 now receiving aid from the county will have their first opportunity to apply for pensions.

Other persons wishing to apply should register at the welfare department where heir names will be kept on file until they are called to make application.

Except in cases of persons unable to leave home, it is required that all applicants for old-age pension come to the office at the courthouse to make a formal application.

Relatives May Help

Moody pointed out that it will often save time if applicants be accompanied by some member of their family who may assist in furnishing information.

Persons who make it known to the welfare department that they wish to apply will receive a letter of appointment.

All persons who have registered to make application for old-age pensions or who are over 65 years of age and now receiving county aid will be sent letters of instruction setting forth the eligibility requirements and explaining the type of necessary information to establish age.

Moody expected that applications would be taken at the rate of approximately ten each week. A greater number, he said, cannot be handled in a week as the other work of the department must be taken care of. From estimates of the department it is hoped that all persons now registered may be investigated by the middle of December.

Vienna Water, Sewage Plans Are Presented

Engineers Put Cost at $200,000, Urge Installation of Both at Same Time as Saving

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST,
P. O. BOX 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Falls Church 2082-M.

Results of the survey for a municipal water and sewage system for the town of Vienna were submitted by the engineers at a special session of the town council. It is estimated the two systems will cost approximately $200,000.

It was explained that neither of the two systems could be put in independently, but a saving would be effected if both were constructed at the same time.

The council voted to file an application with the Public Works Administration for a 45 per cent grant of the cost and to hold a public mass meeting in about two weeks to find out the sentiment of the citizens. The council men stated that if the improvements meet with favorable reaction, a bond issue election probably will be called to pass on financing the balance.

Prince Georges Needs More Health Officers

So Says Dr. Freeman, After Study of County; Also to Recommend New Milk Ordnance

Prince Georges County needs an enlarged health department staff and legislation to control milk supplies, Dr. Allen Freeman, of the State department of health, revealed yesterday.

Dr. Freeman, who recently has completed a survey of health conditions in Prince Georges County under auspices of the board of commissioners, said he would make these and other recommendations before the County Service Council at a dinner meeting Tuesday at the Lord Calvert Inn, College Park.

Dr. Freeman's report discloses there are two pasteurizing plants distributing 4,800 gallons of milk daily within the county, from farms not subject to inspection by the county health department.

In addition, the report reveals there are nine producers selling raw milk.

A tentative milk ordinance has been adopted by the county commissioners, but will not become effective until January 1.

In regard to the need for increased personnel of the county health department, Dr. Freeman pointed to the following facts:

In 1937 there were 1,802 cases of communicable diseases in the county, including 31 cases of typhoid, the largest number in Maryland; 42 cases of diphtheria, the second largestat total in the State, and 70 deaths from tuberculosis.

In 1937, 19 midwives practicing in the county delivered 209 babies.

The county has no public hospital. There are no organized facilities to care for defects among school children.

Only 7,768 homes are connected with public water, and only 6,241 homes wfth public sewers.

Many new homes are being built without sewer connections.

Dr. Robert H. Riley, director of public health in Maryland, will attend the meeting with Dr. Freeman. Dr. V. L. Ellicott, Montgomery County health officer; William B. Matthews, director of the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, and T. Howard Duckett, chairman of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, will speak.

The Maryland Roads Commission yesterday asked for bids on two highway improvement projects in Prince Georges County.

The projects include a concrete surface on half a mile of Branch avenue from Silver Hill to the District line and the resurfacing of 2.5 miles of Central avenue from the Crain highway to the Patuxent River bridge.

Peter J. Carroll, head of the citizens Co-operative Organizing Committee, will preside at the exercises. The opening show will start at 7 p. m.

Herbert E. Evans, vice president of the Consumer Distribution Corporation, announced the theater would operate on a tentative schedule of two pictures a week. One will run Thursday and Friday and the other Saturday and Sunday. The permanent schedule, he said, would be determined by the way the theater was patronized.

Alexander, Farm Security Administration director; Andres Hedberg, Swedish authority on co-operatives; Milo Perkins, of the Department of Agriculture, and K. M. Farley, C. E. Wise, A. W. Horstman, W. Miss Kent Repays Favor Extended By Shaw and Lee

A few years ago Dorothea Kent was dancing in the chorus of a prologue at Grauman's Chinese Theater in Hollywood for $15 a week, and the comedy team of Shaw and Lee was headlining the show.

Shaw and Lee saw talent in Miss Kent that had apparently escaped the stage director's attention, and at the comedians' request she was given a specialty number.

Miss Kent, now a well-known film actress, was able to return the favor. A pair of dumb-cluck detectives was needed in the cast of "The Last Express," Universal Crime Club mystery in which she plays a lead opposite Kent Taylor.

On Miss Kent's suggestion, Shaw and Lee were given the parts.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Washington, Sept. 21.

DEAR PRESIDENT:

I get around quite a bit, running errands for the b. w. and getting my hair cut, and so on, and I hear a lot of things that maybe don't reach you. As a matter of fact, I go to different barber shops so as to pick up as much dope as possible.

Harlan Miller

First of all, I've certainly been impressed how people worried about Jimmy's operation. When he went to the hospital I heard only genuine sympathy . . . Even Franklyn Waltman, who writes pieces for the Republicans, was pulling for him. But what impressed me most was when a couple of insurance men were saying that he was a nice, clean kid trying to get along, and how they hoped his stitches would come out easy.

* * * *

Where I hear the most about you is when the b. w. wangles us an invitation to some big feed where they pass the chicken twice and all white meat at that. There's where they sure sling the harpoon into you. I get so uncomfortable, I can't figure out whether it's my starched shirt or whether it's the exertion of trying to clean my plate before they snatch it away.

To hear 'em talk it's hard to figure but how you ever got elected President. All the smart people must have been worrying about something else then . . . They say you're arrogant and vindictive and won't listen to anyone you can't dominate. I ask 'em how they found out, and it seems mostly hearsay with most of 'em.

* * * *

Occasionally they get off a good one on you, like the fellah who said that if you didn't get hep to all this centralization you'd have one man in Washington for each one outside, running his life for him. But mostly it's enough to make a New Dealer out of a man like me who's only a yes-but man so far, just listening to 'em.

* * * *

Most of 'em seem to agree, though, that you've certainly got a swell foreign policy. Some of 'em act as if they'd like to move abroad to get the benefit of it. They think you'll keep us out of war, but all the while scaring the hot-shot dictators with ants in their pants, the way they scare everybody else. You know how those things turn out.

* * * *

We were out driving in Maryland the other day when the thought struck me that maybe, if you didn't have any more use for one of those two new bridges, you might stretch one of 'em a little and move it over between Cape Henlopen and Cape May across Delaware Bay so your boys from Washington needn't drive such a roundabout way to get to the south Jersey beaches. That would be a bridge. Maybe you could get more use out of those bridges that way, using 'em in different places.

"—catch twice as many fish"

Quite a lot of the boys who have been watching your work, sorta students of human nature, think you'll pan out O. K. in the long run. They think you're more of a humanitarian than George W., but not quite so humble as Lincoln, and maybe a mite more acrimonious. They place you with Jefferson and Jackson, but streamlined.

* * * *

Well, the White House is no place for a cream-puff of a man . . . But it struck me that next time the leader of the Democratic Party gets a yen to go purging, it would be a good thing if the President bundled him off on a fishing trip. It would be great to see the both of 'em in a boat, one in each end, and they'd catch twice as many fish.

* * * *

Here I have rambled along boring you talking about yourself, but I suspect you have to listen to a lot of stuff about the budget and raising revenue and Tommy Corcoran telling you what Justice Holmes would have done . . . If I hear any hints about how to balance the budget I'll write you promptly. Don't take any wooden candidates.

Most respectfully,

ELMER.

Troops Fight Mud as Md. 'War' Ends

Cease Firing Order Comes a Day Early; Commander Calls Corps the Equal to Any in World

By the Associated Press.

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Sept. 20.—Military maneuvers of the Third Corps area ended late today in a sea of mud and amid assurances by the commander of the 5,500 troops they were the equal of those of any other nation.

Maj. Gen. James K. Parson, corps area commander, who issued a "cease firing" order at 3 p. m., a day ahead of schedule, said:

"Troops participating in this exercise were as well trained and well equipped as those of any nation."

Fields Are Liquified.

Wet and weary, the 5,500 infantrymen, cavalrymen, artillerymen, engineers, aviators and medical corps men squished back to their concrete floored tents tonight through the mud under the observant eye of Gen. Parsons. Most of them had spent the night in pup tents pitched on liquified fields and had lunched on sandwiches.

Gen. Parsons wandered over the vast "battlefield" accompanied by an aide observing the stamina of the troops and their morale. Thirty umpires attached to troop units will prepare a critique of the troops in which will be incorporated recommendations for needed training and observations on the value of training during the past year. The final report will guide the course of training for the following year.

The end of the "war" for a mythical hoard of gold bullion on the Fort Meade reservation came after the "Blue" army of 4,000 infantrymen, field artillery and 15 tanks came within cannon fire of the vaults.

Defenders Win

The "Red" defending army of 400 cavalrymen, 45 tanks and field artillery succeeded in delaying the invaders until most of the bullion had theoretically been removed by trucks when the bugler sounded recall.

Earlier, the "Red" army succeeded in theoretically delaying the numerically superior invaders by demolishing the old fort bridge across the flood swollen little Patuxent River.

By the time the recall sounded, officers said many of the seven-ton tanks, armored cars and motorcycles used by messengers, had been placed temporarily out of use when they became mired in hub-deep mud.

Road Work Bids $63,370 Under State Estimate

Baltimore, Sept. 20 (AP).—Evidences of keen competition and price slashing among contractors bidding on State roads commission jobs because apparent today when the commission opened bids on six contracts and found the total cost $63,370 below the total estimated by State engineers.

Item by item, the low bids showed, all but one of the successful contractors went well below the "fair" cost of the work estimated by commission officials.

On one job, the largest of the six advertised, the estimated probable cost set by roads engineers was $164,044, while the bid offered by the Empire Construction Co., of Baltimore, totaled $141,586.

Offering a bid of $63,268 for grading, drainage and gravel surfacing on 4.8 miles of the Solomons Island road, in Calvert County, the C. J. Langenfelder Sons Co., of Baltimore, was more than $30,000 under the $99,288 estimate set up by the commission.

75 Offer to Sell Eye to Virginian; Surgeon Sought

Richlands, Va., Sept. 20 (AP).—More than 75 persons have offered blind Storekeeper M. O. Warner their eyes for sale, the prices ranging from $500 to $25,000. Seven offers came from women.

Warner recently announced that he would pay a "reasonable sum" for an eye to be used in a grafting operation which he hopes will enable him to see again.

His problem now is to find a surgeon who will undertake the operation. "I have sent telegrams to three famous eye doctors," Warner said, "but so far I haven't received any answers."

Greenbelt Vote So Close Only One Is Elected

Sherrod East Alone of 18 Candidates Gets Necessary Majority to Serve on Council

So close was the race for Greenbelt town council yesterday that only one of the 18 candidates for the five posts was able to obtain the necessary majority vote.

Re-elected for a second term was Sherrod E. East, who polled 291 votes. In all, 519 votes were cast, with at least 260 needed for a council seat.

Mrs. Ruth Taylor, lone woman seeking a seat in the town governing body, drew 200 votes, which placed her third in the running, next to Mayor Louis Bessemer, who received 202.

A run-off election, for the four remaining posts in the model town government, will be held next Tuesday from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. This time, however, only a plurality vote will be needed in accordance with the town charter. The eight candidates who received the highest number of votes next to East will be in the run-off. Last year, the first election, the five leading candidates all received majority votes.

Beside Bessemer and Mrs. Taylor, the other six candidates next Tuesday will be Henry A. Maurer, incumbent, who polled 191 votes; Allen D. Morrison, incumbent, 183; Walter R. Volckhausen, 159; Harry E. Hesse, 159; Stanley B. Rider, 147; Edward Thornhill, 145.

The newly-elected council will select the town mayor from among its own members.

Dr. Dabney and Dr. Lambeth Retire From U. of Va. Faculty

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 20.—Retirement of two of the oldest and best known of the University of Virginia faculty members has been announced with the opening of the 115th session.

The retiring faculty members are Dr. Richard Heath Dabney, Corcoran professor of history and formerly dean of the department of graduate studies, and Dr. William Alexander Lambeth, professor of hygiene, formerly superintendent of buildings and grounds, and for many years the guiding genius of Virginia athletics.

Both Dr. Dabney and Dr. Lambeth are alumni of the University of Virginia, and Professor Dabney did post-graduate work in Germany, Professor Lambeth in Italy. Both men have taught here for several decades.

Professor Dabney was the first dean of the department of graduate studies, and through many years he conducted all of the University of Virginia's courses in history. He is the author of several volumes on European and American history as well as a large number of articles.

Prof. Lambeth holds degrees in medicine and in geology, he has written on botany and on architecture, he taught hygee and physical education for almost 50 years, but he is best known for his association with intercollegiate athletics.

The present intercollegiate football and track rules are in a large measure the result of efforts by Prof. Lambeth. He was active on the football rules committee at the momentous session in 1908 when the game was opened up and made safer for the players. It was his suggestion that resulted in the game time being divided into quarters. He was treasurer of the National Athletic Association in 1908.

Prof. Lambeth guided the development of University of Virginia athletics from the early 1890s until the early 1920s. He is in a large measure responsible for the development of the original Southern Conference out of the old organization of Southern State Universities.

In 1930 he was decorated with the Order of the Crown of Italy in recognition of his work in fostering the teaching of Italian at the University of Virginia.

Orphan, 14, Kills Self After Aunt's Scolding for Theft

Hillsville, Va., Sept. 20 (AP).—A 14-year-old orphan had a good time at the Galax fair with $30 that wasn't his, but because he was remorseful for having taken the money, he lay dead today.

Dr. W. A. Porter, Carroll County coroner, said the lad took his own life.

Since the parents of the boy, Carl Bucher, died some years ago, he had made his home with an aged aunt, Miss Martha Wilson at nearby Pipers Gap.

Yesterday after Carl went to the fair, his aunt found $30 had been taken from a trunk.

When the youth returned late in the day, his guardian scolded him severely. Remorseful, the boy went into a room and his aunt heard a shot. She found him dying of a bullet wound through the heart.

Commuters' Fare Boost Favored

Rail's Plea to Cancel Special Rates Within 95-Mile Radius of D. C. Gets Sympathy of I. C. C. Examiner

In spite of protests from residents of several nearby Virginia towns, recommendations that the Southern Railway Co., be permitted to cancel commutation fares within a 95-mile radius of Washington were filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday.

The recommendation—subject to review by the commission—was filed by an ICC examiner following a prolonged investigation of company revenue returns. Should the commutation tickets, costing considerably less than regular fares, be suspended, a straight 2-cents-per-mile rate would go into effect.

In some instances, it was pointed out, the increase would be as much as 240 per cent. The proposed new schedule was filed to become effective July 1, but action was withheld until February 1, 1939, when protests were entered by commuters from nearby sections.

More than 400 persons signed the protests. They use monthly and quarterly commutation tickets between the District and Springfield, Burke, Sideburn, Fairfax, Clifton, Manassas, Bristow Nokesville and Ravensworth. The commuters trains—running three cars each—operate between Washington and Charlottesville.

Couple's Battle On 100-Ft. Tower Related to Jury

Mathews, Va., Sept. 20 (AP).—Keeling Saunders, road force foreman, testified today in the trial of Forrest Ashberry, charged with attempting to throw his wife, Mrs. Ethel Harris Ashberry, from a 100-foot fire lookout tower, that he saw the defendant slap his wife and attempt to break her hold on the steel framework of the platform.

Saunders' story was told to the Circuit Court jury.

Mrs. Ashberry testified she struggled with her husband atop the fire tower when he ordered her to jump and promised to follow her. She said she screamed for help after she finally had induced her husband to go down to get an unsigned check from their car and was rescued by three highway workers.

G. L. Diggs, attorney for Ashberry, told the jury at the opening of the trial that the defendant loved his wife and had no intention of harming her.

Dover, Del., Sept. 20.—The Rev. Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, Washington, was elected bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Delaware at a session of the diocesan convention here tonight.

Should Dr. Hart accept the post, he would succeed the late Bishop Philip Cook and become the fifth bishop of Delaware.

The Washington clergyman was elected after the Rev. Dr. Charles W Clash, of Wilmington, withdrew. On Dr. Clash's motion, Dr. Hart's election was made unanimous.

Just a year ago Dr. Hart declined to accept the position of bishop coadjutor of the Central New York Diocese, to which he also had been elected.

Md. Poultry Income Is $20,000,000

Annual Value Is 20% of Total Farm Gross; Ranks Next to Dairy Products, Study by Dr. Symons Shows

By the Associated Press.

Maryland's poultry industry brings an annual income of $20,000,000, about 20 per cent of the total agricultural income, and is exceeded only by the dairy industry in value of its products, Dr. Thomas B. Symons said today.

The dean and director of the University of Maryland extension service said 92 per cent of all farms in the State raise poultry either as a specialized or supplemental enteprise.

Reporting on the activities of the extension service which is cooperating with poultry organizations in the State to improve the industry, he said 21 hatcheries qualified in 1937 in pullorum testing and breed improvement. More than 250,000 birds were invovled in the tests.

Surveys by the Department of Agricultural economics, he said, showed a 4 per cent lower mortality and 2 cents lower cost for chicks and higher egg production per pullet when chicks were purchased from local breeders.

Dr. Symons said results from a farm egg record project conducted during the past eight years show 74 farms, averaging 314 birds each, producing 150 eggs per bird with a mortality of 17.6 per cent. He said the Maryland average is about 80 eggs per bird and a 20 per cent mortality.

Jonesville, Va., Sept. 20 (AP).—Convicted of the robbery-attack of George Fugate, wealthy Lee County bachelor, two Tazewell youths must serve 30 years in the State penitentiary and a third faces a 10-year term.

Two girls who were indicted with the Tazewell men, Minnie Long, 17, and Sarah Barnette, 16, of Middleboro, Ky., were acquitted.

18 WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1938 ***

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Back Again!

You may not remember the name but perhaps you can recall the face. I'm Povich, the fellow who used to operate this space back in the days when Chamberlain was a hero in England, not Germany. Those were the days, too, when a guy didn't have to choose between his life and his tonsils.

POVICH.

It seems that a fellow named Haight has been occupying this space for the past week. I should have warned you about him. Turn that fel low loose with a typewriter and nothing else to do and Brother Haight goes townward on his favorite topic: "The Misspent Youth of Walter Haight." If Brother Haight has been all the places he says he has been and done all the things he says he has done, he is at this writing, exactly 188 years old.

But you can't get mad at a guy like him. He must have misunderstood the fellow who said keep a stiff upper lip. Because Haight has been keeping a tongue in his cheek for years. His idea of being serious is, literally, a joke. He's been hanging around the horse tracks so long he still thinks they're waiting for a spot for Whistler's Mudder.

Lot Is Happening

But other things besides Haight have been happening on the sports pages, it seems. We understand that the Yankees have won another American League pennant, that the Redskins discovered that Brooklyn is very much in the football league, and that the last of the Turnesas was the first to win the National Amateur golf championship.

The Yankees' pennant victory is hardly exciting. As long ago as last Fourth of July, it was apparent that the Yankees were going to win the pennant. That was the day when they hauled up to even terms with the Cleveland Indians for the league lead. In a spot where they could look the Indians in the eye, the Yanks were always the best bet.

The Yankee menace continues to grow in the American League. This year they won the pennant three days earlier than in 1937. The American League schedule through September has been practically meaningless. The Yanks made a shambles of the race and virtually cut the seasona month short. Nobody ever was excited about a fight for second place which is all that is occupying the American League these days.

Give Pie Credit

Unless the Pirates suffer a complete collapse in the last two weeks of the season it will be the Yankees vs. Pittsburgh in the World Series. That will be all right with the Nation's fans who are weary of seeing the Yanks vs. the Giants. And the Pirates are to be preferred over the Cubs whose idea of gaining a pennant is buying it. Pie Traynor has done a whole of a job on that Pittsburgh club.

That 16-16 affair between the Redskins and the Dodgers on Sunday had its interesting angles. There was, for example, that contingent from Annapolis, 100 strong. The Navy Athletic Association paid for those seats so that their football players might sit in on some skilled football. And Navy coaches have bought and paid for a special box to all of the Redskins' home gaes. They hope to draw a few ideas from the pros, too.

Mr. Clark Griffith wasn't exactly hurt, either, by that Dodgers-Redskins' game. The crowd of 22,000 fans paid more than $23,000 into the box office and Mr. Griffith's reward for watching the game was in excess of $3,000, or 15 per cent. That sum does not include the profits from the food and parking concessions which up the Washington Club's take another $1,000. There is no evidence that the Washington Club is in any great haste to deny the use of its park to the Redskins.

Ray Sees Red

Whereas Mr. Griffith was very much pleased and the fans well repaid, it seems that Mr. Flaherty was no little vexed by the game. Mr. Flaherty, who coaches the Redskins, was happy to settle for a tie only in the last minute. He thought the Redskins should have won by a couple of touchdowns despite the absence of his pet, Sammy Baught.

To hear Coach Flaherty tell it, and to hear Harry Costello, who saw the motion pictures of the game, affim Flaherty's opinion, the Redskins were bums on the defense. "There was too much of that wishful tackling with the arms instead of the shoulders," chorused the Messrs. Costello and Flaherty, after viewing the pictures. "We are ashamed of the Redskins!"

For example, points out Mr. Costello, Andy Farkas during the brief time he was in the Redskins' line-up, made fifive tackles. "That is a heluva lot of tackles for a safety man to make inside of a few minutes," said Mr. Costello, who ought to know. "That means that those Dodgers were pouring through that Redskin line and past the secondary. They are lucky that Farkas knows how to make tackles. If he did not know how, the Redskins would have taken what is best described as an awful licking."

At that, according to Costello, who, as we were saying, saw the pictures, the Dodgers were lucky to be in position to score their last three points. Because the Redskins got a cruel beak from the officials when Justice apparently intercepted a Brooklyn pass late in the third quarter.

The ball was taken fro mthe Redskins and given to Brooklyn by the officials, who said they detected illegal use of the hands by Ernie Pinckert on the play. According to Costello, the pictures showed Pinckert was guiltless. Inferred that the last Pinckert should have gotten out of it was a mistrial.

Galehouse Holds Nats, Tribe Wins

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cleveland, Sept. 20.—The hot and cold Nats met up with Dennis W. Galehouse and the Cleveland Indians here this afternoon and were not so hot, dropping the first of a two-game series, their last appearance in Cleveland this season, by a 9-1 score.

Galehouse, tall husky and unpredictable righthander, was on his best pitching behavior and scattering nine hits—all singles—and receiving excellent support from his mates, outpitched Dutch Leonard, Elon Hogsett and Renne Monteagudo to break the Nats' one-game winning streak.

The Nats were a feeble lot at the plate when hits meant runs and wasted four hits and a pair of walks before finally pushing over their only run in the sixth. In the second they loaded the bases with none out and failed to score when Bonura was caught at the plate on Travis' tap to Galehouse and Giuliani hit into a double play.

But at the time the situtaion was not serious. Leonard was most misleading the way he was throwing two innings of hitless and runless ball at the Indians. As he and Galehouse mowed down the enemy batters the game took on the mantle of a pitcher's duel. But the toga of invincibility that Leonard was draping around his portly figure was torn in the third by two Cleveland runs and completely shredded in the fourth by a cluster of three.

Leonard's own wildness started his downfall in the third. Kroner, leadoff man, was hit with a pitched ball and then with one out he walked Lary. Campbell then came through with Cleveland's first hit, a double off the wall in right center and Galehouse, who had forced Kroner, and Lary both clattered across the plate.

Lary Walks

Then in the fourth the trouble started all over again. Hal Trosky, big vulgar fellow that he is with a bat in his hand, slapped a tremendous single off the screen in left. Pytlak singled, sending Trosky to second, and then Keltner got his costly rookie form in front of a Leonard pitch and the bases were loaded. Kroner walked, forcing in Trosky and then, after Galehouse obligingly struck out, Lary flied to Simmons, tallying Pytlak. Keltner scored on a passed ball.

Trailing 5-0, the Nats came to bat with a flourish in the sixth and went through all the motions of a big inning before they ended up with one miserly run. Case singled to center, the fifth hit off Galehouse, and took third on a single by Lewis and a one-base error by Kroner, who let Weatherly's relay get away from him. When Kroner continued to foozle the ball, Case dashed for home, but was out on a perfect throw, Kroner to Pytlak.

Montegudo went to the mound for Washington in the sixth and

Finals in Annual Golf Play Set for Thursday as Rain Balks Play

The Washington Post Cup finals between Mrs. Arnold McNitt, Congressional, and Mrs. Jack Scott, were gaain postponed yesterday and, weather permitting, will be played Thursday morning at 9:30 a. m., over the Manor course.

The title encounter was scheduled to go on yesterday, rain or shine, after Saturday's postponement, but the District Women's Golf Association and The Post officials did not anticipate the three-dav consecutive rain or the morning deluge and thus cancelled the finals an hour before they were scheduled to start.

With the match postponed twice already, it will be put off a third time on Thursday if the weather does not take a turn for the better, as the players may as well have a good day for it now that they have waited five days after Saturday's scheduled final.

The Manor angle was also taken into consideration, as the course would have been heavy and possibly damaged from play after the rains.

The consolation final between Mrs. A. A. McEntee, Kenwood, and Mrs. Harvey Cooper, Manor, will be played at 9:25 on Thursday.

New Yorkers Lose 5th Straight, New Record for Team; Stratton in Form

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—The championshin New York Yankees hit a new low for Joe McCarthy's eight years as manager when they lost to the Chicago White Sox, 5 to 4, for their fifth straight defeat.

McCARTHY.

Not since McCarthy took over from Bob Shawkey in 1931 have the Yanks lost five in a row. Monte Stratton did it today, holding the champions at bay after a two-run uprising in the eigth threatened to tie up the score. Stratton held the Yanks to eight hits in hanging up his fifteenth victory.

Bump Hadley had a two-run lead for the New Yorkers going into the sixth inning but a base on balls to Mervyn Connors, a double by Luke Appling and a single by Meyer tied the score.

Pirates, Shamrocks Game Postponed

Boston, Sept. 20 (AP).—Wet grounds and threatening weather today forced postponement until next Monday night of tonight's scheduled professional football game between the Pittsburgh Pirates of the National League, and the Boston Shamrocks.

The Pirates, with Byron (Wrizzer) White, former Colorado star, will play the Dodgers in Brooklyn Friday night.

Gevinson, Quarles Bout Set Tonight

Fight, Twice Rained Out, to Be Indoors if Weather Is Bad; Boxing Board Acts to Speed Show

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The weatherman called a second strike on the Norment Quarles-Lou Gevinson fight last night, shoving it back until tonight at Griffith Stadium—unless, of course, it rains some more.

In any event, the boys will meet tonight, for, in the eventof additional damp weather, it will be transferred indoors to the cramped but dry varters of Turner's Arena. The final decision as to the site of the fisticuffing will not be made until late this afternoon.

The District Boxing Commission stepped into the picture with a plea to the principals to go ahead with the fight, indoors or out, and get it over with. The commission is anxious to get the clout calendar cleared to avoid any last minute jams before its own show October 3, featuring Petey Sarron and Yucatan Kid.

Mamakos and Pacho

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, meanwhile, proceeded with plans for next weeks' card, which will feature Steve Mamoks and Bobby Pacho in the main ten-round event—if Pacho can be signed. One of the most durableof the welterweights campaigning today, Paho has a style similar to Mamakos', and will stand toe-to-toe with the Greek boy and slug all night if tSeve is willing. But Pacho wants more money than Ahearn has offered, and refuses to budge unless the matchmaker agrees to raise the ante.

Gevinson, reputedly in the best condition of his career, remains a 9-5 favorite with little Quarles money in view. The sporting gentry figures Lou hits too hard for a fighter of Quarles' caliber, who can be hit. They also point out that should Gevinson fail to hurdle the Southerner he might as well hang up the gloves for good and concentrate on his bookkeeping.

It will be remembered that before his bout with Sarron it was said that Gevinson's future hung in the balance, and the statement was borne out by his failure to box during the summer. If Quarles beats him tonight, and he might knock him out, Gevinson will be definitely relegated to preliminary ranks.

Gevinson on Spot

Quarles remained in Richmond where he worked out again after hearing of the second postponement. He will motor to Washington this morning in time for the weighing-in and a nap. Chris Dundee, who was in Richmond yesterday, returned more confident than ever that his boy will win—and by a knockout. Dundee doesn't expect Gevinson to stay five rounds with Quarles, who has one of the best left-hooks i n the business. The Southern boy is a sucker for a right hand, but not the kind Gevinson throws, and doesn't figure to suffer much damage in this respect. He can, on the other hand, use his left as well as the right—use it better, as a matter of fact, and if he wins this will be the punch that does it.

The supportitng card includes Bob Mathias vs. Johnny Tejera, Carl Dell vs. El Brookman and Billy Bullock vs. Joe Perry, all sixes, and an opening four-rounder.

Bicycle Sweepstakes Entries Open

Entries are now being received for the fourth National Capital Bicycle Sweepstakes to be held Sunday afternoon, October 16, on the Elipse roadway.

Then entires, which close at midnight, October 12, should be forwarded to Winifree Johnson, 1211 New Interior Building.

Yanks Open Series Sale

Demand for Tickets Steady; Attendance and Gate May Set Record This Year

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—Demand for tickets for the New York Yankees' home games in the world series has been fairly steady. The sale for the three games at Yankee Stadium started Friday.

In all the Yanks have 70,029 seats available. Some 42,000 are reserved with tickets selling in blocks of three games. Reservations for a seat in the grandstand for the three days probably October 7, 8 and 9, must be accompanied by $16.50. Three box seats for the games will cost $19.80. Prices remain unchanged, $5.50 for lower grandstand and mazzanine, $6.60 for boxes, $3.30 for the upper grandstand unreserved and $1.10 for bleachers, unreserved.

Each day there will be 28,000 unreserved seats, 14,000 in the top deck of the grandstand and 14,000 in the bleachers. If the stadium games draw overflow crowds, some 5,000 standees will be admitted daily at $3.30.

Accordingly each game in the stadium may draw more than $300,000. The record gate for a single world series contest was $240,591 in the Yankee-Giant series of 1936 in the stadium. The attendance record, 66,669, also was set that day. With enlarged facilities, the stadium crowds may better both marks on the Saturday and Sunday dates this year.

Applications for tickets should be made to the American League Baseball Club of New York, 55 West Forty-Second street, New York City.

National Tennis Title Play Again Stopped by Rain

New York, Sept. 20 (AP).—Players in the National Singles Tennis Championships wondered today if they would get home in time for Thanksgiving dinner when for the fourth straight day play in the three remaining semifinal matches was postponed because of rain.

If the weather relents and the soggy courts dry, the semifinals will be played tomorrow and the finals Thursday.

Alice Marble, the Nation's No. 1 ranking star from Los Angeles, and her doubles partner, Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Cambridge, Mass., will fight it out for the right to meet Australia's Nancy Wynne for the women's title.

The men's matches call for Champion Don Budge to meet Sidney Wood, and Gene Mako, Budge's Davis Cup doubles teammate, to tangle with Jack Bromwich, of Australia.

Wins Over Mrs. Davy By 10 and 8

Helen Dettweiler Is Lone D. C. Player Left in Tourney; Defeats Betsy MacLeod

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—A chubby, freckle-faced Minnesota girl, the sensation of the year in women's golf, blazed a spectacular trail to new heights in the Women's National championship today.

Colorful little Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, with an amazing 10 and 8 shutout victory, paced a smart field into tomorrow's second and third rounds of match play.

The day saw a majority of favorites stick in the title running and veteran campaigner, Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, bow out of the championship picture.

When Miss Berg routed Mrs. Myron Davy, of Washington, tourney officials, hastily thumbing record books, agreed that her performance of winning ten straight holes was unprecedented, at least in the modern era of women's play.

The Minnesota ace, winner of nine out of 12 tourneys this season, "burned up" the Westmorelannd course, touring the first nine in 38, one under par, and winning with a par 4 on the tenth grene. Giving Mrs. Davy no openings, Miss Berg had seven pars, two birdies and only one bogey.

Dettweiler Alone

Miss Dettweiler advanced by downing Betsy MacLeod, of Williamsville, N. Y., Duke University student, 1 up in their 18-hole duel. The Washington player held a 1-up margin at the turn and won another hole at the tenth.

Miss MacLeod won the eleventh with a birdie 4 and, after halving two holes, squared the match at the fourteenth with an eagle 2, sinking a 150-yard approach. Miss MacLeod won the sixteenth, lost the seventeenth, as she was short with

A young Georgia star, Dorothy Kirby of Atlanta, sparkled brightly into the title scene by sending Mrs. Vare to the sidelines. All even through 16 holes, Miss Kirby took the seventeenth as her opponent—six times winner of the crown—bunkered her tee shot. A half on the eighteenth ended the veteran's hopes.

A majority of favorites came through as expected. Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, N. C., the defending champion, downed Mrs. Eric Phillips, of Lambton Mills, Ontario. Dorothy Traung of San Francisco, co-medalist with Mrs. Page, eliminated Mrs. Lillian Zech of Chicago, Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., sent Dorothy Ellis of Indianapolis out, and Maureen Orcutt, Haworth, N. J., trounced Bernice Wall of Chicago and Oshkosh, Wis. Those victories were all by 4 and 3 margins.

British Women Win

The British contingent of six players made an excellent showing, with four advancing to the second round. They were Mrs. J. B. Walker, Jessie Anderson, Clarrie Tiernan and Mrs. Diana Fishwick Critchley.

Miss Anderson eliminated a British Curtis Cup teammate, Nan Steel Baird, 5 and 4, while Phyllis Ware, also a member of the British Curtis squad, bowed to Helen Waterhouse, of Warwick, R. I., one up.

Two rounds of play tomorrow will reduce the field to eight contestants. Quarter finals Thursday and semi-finals Friday over 18 holes will precede Saturday's 36-hole title skirmish.

Colleges Abandon Opening-Day Setups; Look at Saturday's Card!

By "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh,
Forward Passing Champion, National Football League.

They've been stepping up the pace in college football in recent years and the fans are no longer forced to attend setup games if they want to see some early-season football.

SAMMY BAUGH.

Look at the college schedule for Saturday. There are a dozen games on it that would look well as mid-season contests, yet for more of the teams it will be their opening games. A half dozen years ago fans could not have imagined Minnesota meeting Washington in its opener, or Alabama playing Southern California, or Pitt battling West Virginia. But that is what will happen on Saturday.

The big colleges are rapidly getting away from the old idea of playing setup games and warming up to the big games later in the campaign. This year there are more big early-season games than ever before and last year the same was true. Next season we'll probably see many more of these nationally important games being played in September.

It's not so difficult to understand, though, why it's getting to be a more common practice to take on important opposition at the start of the season. In the first place, there is the matter of gate receipts. Every college and every coach are interested in gate receipts no matter how pure they may pretend to be.

Filling an early-season date with an important game means one more highly profitable contest on the schedule. That same game might not prove to be such an attractive drawing card if played later in the season. By that time, both the home club or the visiting college might be beaten several times and out of the race for sectional or national titles. Folks would pass up the game, perhaps, in favor of another contest.

But at the start of the season, both teams go into the game with a clean slate—unbeaten, untied and unscored on. The fact that they have not as yet played a game doesn't make much difference at that time, because the fans are eager to see some football and they are drawn to the game by the records of the previous season.

Another reason why a great many of the colleges are playing these big early-season games is the Rose Bowl. In the case of Minnesota, that idea is out, of course, on account of the Big Ten ruling against Rose Bowl competition, but most of the other colleges in these important early season games are interested in the Rose Bowl and the approximate $100,000 the invitation means.

The Rose Bowl people are particular about who they invite to Pasadena. The team from the East must show a representative schedule—an undefeated record isn't enough. That's why so many colleges are willing to gamble on scheduling these important early season games. The reward is big if they are successful.

There has been much sympathy in recent years for the smaller colleges who are taken on by the bigger schools in the opening games as warm-up opponents. Every time one of the small schools gets licked by a big score like 56-0, the editorial writers say the practice should be stopped and at such uneven contests shouldn't be scheduled.

Well, I don't know about that. In the first place, the smaller schools are usually well paid for these games, getting bigger guarantees than they could hope for if they stayed in their own class. That is compensation for taking a beating.

And then again, I doubt if the smaller colleges in these warm-up games are at such a terrific disadvantage. They may not have as much material to be sure, but that may be an advantage because the coach of the big school with 100 or more football players at his command really doesn't know at that stage of the season which is his best team.

The little school has probably worked as a unit much longer and has probably absorbed more football. I think the smaller college has a better chance of knocking off these big teams when it plays them in the opening game than at any other time. In midseason it might be murder.

Stralka, Ex-Hoya Ace, May Start Against Rams

Down In Front

—By Richards Vidmer

End of Excuses

New York, Sept. 20.—After tomorrow there can be no more moaning at the bar, or nineteenth hole as it is affectionately called in the best regulated golf clubs. No more will anyone be privileged to offer as an excuse for a bad score a little thing like a bad bounce, a heel print in a trap, a dangling divot in a fairway, or an ill wind. Beginning tomorrow anyone with $12.50, the eighth part of a C-note can get as fair a test of his golfing ability as anyone yet has devised.

VIDMER.

The test will take place at the Fenway Country Club in White Plains, and the winner won't ride simply on an 18-hole victory, nor a 36-hole triumph. He will not be crowned after three rounds of competition or even four, but six. And one little slip isn't going to beat anybody in 108 holes. In fact any golfer who manages to get by that stretch with no more than a dozen mistakes should breeze through.

Always there are the alibis. And generally they are founded on the idea that something could have been done about it if the test had been a little longer. But the Westchester mamathon should eliminate all that. It's the longest test anyone has offered so far. And the greatest in the country have entered, with $13,500 at which to shoot and $5,000 for the winner. It's not only the longest, but the richest tournament ever played.

This event, with no title to dignify it or for the winner to carry away, should settle rather conclusively who is the best golfer in the land at the moment. Harry Cooper has been called the most consistent performer in the field, yet he never has won a national championship. Still he is to be found right up with the leaders. Almost always among the first five in tournament after tournament. This may be his opportunity to show the way over the long pull.

Distance Favors Snead

Sammy Snead has been a red hot favorite in the last two Open championships, but has won neither. Over the longer route he may get so far in front that there will be no catching him. Gene Sarazen, always at his best when the stakes are highestfi has won all the titles worth winning and may find little incenntive in the regular recognized events.

But there's incentive enough for any golfer when $5,000 is waiting for the winner. Incidentally, Gene won the highest paying event so far, the Agua Caliente open when the country was booming, and he carried off the richest prize that was hung up last season in the Chicago open. It may be a hunch.

Jimmie Thomson, Ralph Guldahl, winner of the open two years in a row; Paul Runyan, the P. G. A. champion; Dick Metz, runner-up to Guldahl at Denver this year; Henry Picard, winner of the Masters at Augusta in the spring; Horton Smith, Byron Nelson, Denny Shute, Jimmy Hines and all the others whose names are familiar to every follower, of golf have entered the field.

And there are some of the old timers who are back again for a crack at this new test, including Walter Hagen. The Haig turned in a score of 286 in the Canadian open recently, which is proof enough that he still can compete with the younger generation, and he should be one of the most popular entries at Fenway through the rest of this week. It will be his first competitive appearance in the New York district since the open at Fresh Meadow in 1932, when Sarazen came streaking down through the last 28 holes in an even 100 shots and carried off the title.

Only 60 Will Finish

Altogether there are more than 280 entries, but only 60 will finish. Half the field will play 18 holes tomorrow and the other half will go the first leg of the long journey Thursday. The 150 best scores will go on from there. At least they will go on through the second 18-hole test on Friday. Then the field will be cut to 100 for the 36 holes on Saturday and the final paring will reduce the contestants to 60 for the last two rounds on Sunday.

Out of this marathon a winner will emerge and it is doubtful if his name ever will be forgotton as long as golf is played, for golfers are not prone to forget easily. In fact there are many who remember that it was just 25 years ago today that Francis Ouimet, an unknown amateur from Massachusetts defeated the great Harry Vardon and the equally celebrated Ted Ray in the play-off for the open championship at Brookline. That victory, more than anything else, brought the game to the attention of the national public.

And, as I said, here are many who still remember, among them George R. Jacobus, president of the P. G. A., who thought the occasion should be celebrated on its twenty-fifth anniversary.

Masterson, Hartman to Open Game

Flaherty Certain Trio Will Perform Well Against Cleveland at the Stadium Sunday; Hilltopper Lauded

Clem Stralka, 205-pounds of dynamite in Georgetown's line last year and one of the Hoyas' unsung heroes, may get an opportunity to prove his mettle as a pro gridman Sunday when the Redskins entertain the Cleveland at Griffith Stadium.

While tiny rivulets of rain coursed down his wind-beaten features and between commands to his squad as it ran through signals yesterday, Coach Ray Flaherty intimated that Stralka might get a starting berth Sunday against the Rams. Stralka and one or two others, he added, mentioned Masterson, hero of the Dodgers game, and Hartman, whose passes resulted in two touchdowns.

Flaherty Lauds Stralka

Flaherty's reasons for using Masterson and Hartman are obvious, but when he digs down into the relief rolls for a virtually unknown youngster like Stralka and nominates him for a starting berth, it's worth mentioning. A keen judge of men and their ability, Flaherty thinks Stralka has the makings of a great pro lineman, and has been working on him since the chunky lad reported for the initial practice of the year.

"He was slow pulling out on the running plays," Flaherty said yesterday. "That was his only major fault. He could do everything else well. He needed a little polish, of course, but they all have to learn the little tricks of pro ball, just as they had to pick up the college stuff. Now, it looks as though Clem has the knack of getting out of his position to clear the way for the runner.

"He's husky, and a good blocker as well as a vicious tackler, and I think he's going to show the folks something. Speed is the only thing against him, and if he continues as well as he has in the last few days I don't expect any trouble on that score."

The opinion is unanimous at Georgetown that Stralka will make the grade with the Tribesmen. Head Coach Jack Hagerty called him one of the greatest linesmen in Georgetown history, and a lot of good ball players won their spurs at the Hilltop. Hagerty was unstinting in his praise of the quiet, blond boy who played virtually every second of all the major games. Hagerty couldn't recall an instance when Stralka was injured or had to be replaced for failing to carry out his assignment. He was a literal iron man.

"Mush" Dubofsky, the line coach who tutored Stralka and probably knew him better than anyone else, said Clem was one of his best pupils—and a brainy as well as brawny player. He was, according to Dubofsky, the type of player who caught on quickly, who never made the same mistake twice—and made precious few errors, and who picked up tricks from other teams he played.

Flaherty also said Andy Farkas, the flatfoot speedster, will be used frequently Sunday, although he will not be in the starting line-up. Farkas looks like the climax runner the Redskins need and the coach doesn't want to use him unnecessarily, thereby exposing him needlessly to injury. He'll get into action when the team's spirits are flagging—for he seems to be a tonic for the boys; and when a good jaunt is needed for a score.

Hagerty Sees Rain as Helpful To Hoyas; Rest Aids Team

Georgetown and Catholic Squads Drill Indoors; Terps and Colonials Hold Outdoor Workouts; Hilltop Stars Gain Weight; Dobson Preps for Game

By Jack Munhall.

Though Georgetown's gridmen, together with Catholic's Cardinals, confined their practice to the gymnasium again yesterday while the more daring Maryland and George Washington squads slid in the slush, Hoya Coach Hagerty, at least, is not singing and hoping "It ain't goin-a rain no more."

As a matter of fact, Hagerty has found a very pleasant angle on the west spell and actually drips with glee when he thinks of the benefitfi it has been to his boys. It seems several of the Georgetowns were far under their best playing weight and vacation from heavy drills is proving of substantial aid.

Joe Mellendeck and Lou Ghecas, speedy backs, and oe Burke, veteran guard, are three who bear silent proof of Hagerty's contention. Mellendeck has gained 8 badly needed pounds, from 156 to 164, and Checas, who weighed 185 last year, has come up from 162 to 174. Burke's weight gain has not been near as heavy, but the rest certainly has done him no harm. All three have been on special diets.

Other Hoyas who have been shunning the heavy going are Red Daly, Washington boy, and Joe Daniels, both ends. Daly is nursing a shoulder injured in practice last week and Daniels still is recovering from an operation prior to the first practice.

Maryland held another scrimmage yesterday and plans to repeat the procedure today when Coach Frank Dobson expects to ascertain just which 26 players he will retain on the varsity.

Meanwhile the silver-haired mentor's worst fears regarding Richmond, the Terps' opening-game foe were realized after a report from Scout Al Heagy who watched the Spiwers' debut against Naval Apprentice School. Heagy reported that the Virginians have three great linemen in Andy Pronczek, 200-pound sophomore tackle; Ed Merrick, center, and Forrest Norvell, and a wealth of good backs.

Glen Thistlethwaite used no less than eight backs against the Naval School and, according to Heagy, showed several potent passing combinations. The Spiders gained two-thirds of their ground on passes and it is this phase of attack that Thistlethwaite hopes will upset the Terps.

Over on the polo field George Washington's Colonials held a practice in light-weight equipment under Coach Bill (Paddiefoot) Reinhart. The Colonials have just dubbed the genial Oregonian with that reference to a duck because, when they squawk about working in the rain he tells 'em it's good Oregon weather.

But Reinhart has more serious reasons for not missing any chance to practice. The team, which started training later than ever before, has had only one heavy scrimmage and Reinhart feels they're not near ready for Furman, which is met in the opener September 30. The Southerners will be playing their third game of the season.

Today, if the weather is clear, the Colonials will invade College Park for a scrimmage with Maryland.

Signal drills and an extra-long blackboard session were the order of the day at Catholic University, as Coach Bergman added gray hairs wondering when his punters were going to be able to practice. The Cardinals, none too well fortified with good kickers, are relying on Burke Vidnovic, Joe Guyon and Pete Sachon. But the trio is way behind schedule because a slippery ball is not at all conducive to lengthy or accurate booting.

Passing, predictas of the Cardinal offense, also has been absent from recent practice and Bergman is more than anxious to take another look at the two sky-way combinations that starred in the varsity-frosh scrimmage Saturday, Charlie Moutenot, sophomore sensation, throws the leather to Hank Brostek in one act and the veterans, Vidnovic and Guyon team up in the other. Bergman expects a lot from this quartet, but they, like the kickers, badly need practice.

Chilean Officers' Horses Arrive

Baltimore, Sept. 20 (AP).—The eight blooded horses Chilean Army officers will ridein Washington, New York and Canadian horse shows got rid of their sea legs here today.

The horses arrived aboard the Grace liner Lara, accompanied by Lieut. Herman Vigil, a member of the Chilean Army team. They were taken to Fort Myer, Va., to await the International Horse Show in Washington late in October.

Lieut. Vigil's teammates, Capt. Eduardo Yanez and Lieuts. Pelago Izurieta and Guillermo Castro, met them here.

The team also will participate in the National Horse Show in Madison Square Garden, New York, in November, and later that month in a show at Toronto, Canada.

Cleveland greeted him with their sixth score, Kroner smashed a single off Myer's gloved hand. Lary walked, Kroner moving to second. Weatherly dropped a single at Wright's feet in right and Kroner scored.

Washington made a mild threat in the seventh when Myer opened the inning with a long double to left. But Giuliani hit into a double play, Lary to Kroner to Trosky, and Wasdell batting for Montegudo fanned.

Just as they had received Montegudo the Indians took to Hogsett. Before the Injun' had adjusted his toe to the mound the seventh Tribe run was across. Trosky, that man again, lined a single to left and on the hit and run, Pytlak singled to left, Trosky going to third. Keltner then lined to Case and Trosky scored.

And then in the eighth Cleveland concluded its run making on a single by Lary, a triple by Weatherly and a deep fly by Campbell.

At Home about Town

AS THE NEW season of debs and dances swings ahead, the year's smoking vogue steps along with it. Go to Meadowbrook or the St. Regis, Tuxedo or the Plaza, you'll find that when the sophistocrat chooses his cigar, he smokes the trim, suave Robt. Burns Panatela de Luxe.

He likes its long, elegant gracefulness—so unobtrusive—befitting a high bred profile and formal evening attire. He likes the tacit approval accorded it by women of fashion.

But most of all he relishes the exquisite taste of its 100% choice Havana filler. Flavor without wallop. Be smart—be modern—and smoke smart society's own cigar.

Superstition Wins Chestertown Purse, Feature at Havre de Grace

Pays $14.50 Mutuel for Muddy Test

5,000 Spectators See Program; Vain Bo Is 2d; Searer 3d; Late Races Are in Haze

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 20.—Superstition, son of Apprehension, ran and swam to a half-length victory in the Chestertown Purse, feature race of a gloomy day here on the south bank of the Susquehanna River. With the track resembling a tributary of Chesapeake Bay, the 2-year-old gelding galloped the closing 50 yards as if equipped with an outboard motor and shunted Vain Bo into second money. Scarer was third in a field of ten. Superstition paid $14.50.

Regulars made up the greater portion of the 5,000 present and frequent downpours kept them under cover. The late races were run in a haze that made colors almost undistinguishable.

When Starter Jim Milton sent the field away, Ghost Flyer and Boat's Crew began staging a private duel out in front. They battled for the pace until reaching midstretch. At this point they tossed in the sponges and it was anybody's race. Vain Bo, after saving ground entering the stretch, took a brief lead but along came Superstition. Scarer also closed well for the third money.

Pretteia, a little gal horse from Hollywood Park, proved the best of the mud-slingers gathered for the first race. With Jockey Gilbert directing her course, the Gallant Sir filly drove home ahead of Forever Green and Bob Junior to pay a $5.50 mutuel as the favorite in a group of 11 juveniles. Bob Junior set most of the pace, but weakened when caught by the ultimate winner.

The second race went to Idyllic, a $10.10 shot which was prominent in half-mile racing in Maryland. In the colors of Claude Feltner of Berryville, Va. Idyllic led throughout the six furlongs, winning by five lengths. Amhurst and Sea Gull followed the leader to the wire.

Woodwaac, with Jockey Ralph Eccard up, won a length victory over the favored Uvalde in the fourth event. After shaking off Fred Astaire, Woodwaac went wide while setting the pace and interfered slightly with Uvalde. However, Jockey Haas' claim of foul was disallowed. Woodwaac paid $12.60.

Navy Plugs Guard Posts

Coach Hank Hardwick Shifts Trimble and Rowney to Bolster Weak Spot

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 20.—The Navy football squad worked in the gym this morning, in lieu of the early morning field service which have now been called to a halt, but had a long workout in the rain this afternoon, giving the backs plenty of practice in handling a wet ball. Attack formations and spot scrimmage occupied most of the time.

To give the team more strength at the guards, where there is a lack of experience, Head Coach Harwick has shifted Bex Trimble, a 220 pound tackle, and Jim Rowney, a stout end of 185 pounds, to the group of players in those positions. They will probably be first reserves to Herman Spector and Dave Wolfe, now holding the places.

Trimble and Wolfe were the strong tackles of B squad last year, and they have now both been placed at guard. Rowney made a good impression as a plebe end. Spector is now the only guard who has had a fair amount of experience in that position, but the squad is strong as to tackles.

George Ghesquiere, end and Harold Harwood, center, who have been on the casualty list, took part in the practice this afternoon. Both have been doing good work and are the first substitutes in their positions.

With the return of Ghesquiere and Harwood, and of Ken Hysong, tackle, who reported yesterday, the second-string team is now in good shape and it appears that both the first and second elevens should be completed for Saturday season opening game with William and Mary.

Today, rain again prevented the exhibition match of tennis, in which Bobby Riggs, Joe Hunt and other cracks, were to take part. Commander Ward B. Davis, graduate manager of athletics, said that the match was now improbable.

Sumatra Captures Saginaw Handicap

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—Sumatra III, imported filly from the Argentine, raced toa length and a half victory over Merry Caroline today in the Sagniaw Handicap at Hawthorne. Dark Sun was third, with Little Drift, the favorite, back in the field.

Sumatra III, owned by Lawrence Baker, of Los Angeles, and ridden by W. Leishman, went into the lead at the head of the stretch and covered the 6 furlongs over a heavy track in 1:20 2-5. The winner returned $13.40.

The Sox won the first, 12 to 8, and took a 7-to-2 victory in the second, called at the end of the eighth because of darkness.

Twilight in the National

The sun sinks low on the current baseball season and this unusual photograph, taken in a recent Pirate-Boston game, seems to symbolize the last-minute twilight struggle the National League leaders are putting on for the pennant. Bucs Face Tough Test

Must Work Mound Staff Overtime in Double Bills From Now On

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—The Pittsburgh Pirates again found their pitching staff faced with extra duty today as rain washed out their double header with Brooklyn. The Pirates now must play two games with the Dodgers tomorrow and Thursday.

Pirate Manager Pie Traynor can find some consolation in the fact the Chicago Cubs, the second-place team, three and a half games behind, are likewise burdened. The Cubs must meet the Phillies, esjecially dangerous for pennant contenders this season, in two games on the same days.

The othr two first-division clubs, the Cincinnati Reds and New York Giants, meet in a double bill tomorrow. The Reds are five games behind the Pirates and the Giants six and a half.

Since the Dodgers and Cubs have an off day Friday, Larry MacPhail, general manager of the Dodgers, offered Chicago a chance to play off their doubleheader postponed yesterday at Ebbets Field. Manager Gabby Hartnett said he would not it his club play the games, since the Cubs open a three-game stand at home against the Cardinals Saturday.

Additional rain probably will mean the cancellation of games as the contending clubs are booked almost solidly from now until the end of the season, October 2. All clubs concerned would have to agree before the schedule could be shuffled to play off the games. It is not likely the Pirates will do this, since cancelled games are in their favor.

Rain Delays Rehearsals; 100 in Swim

Tomorrow Night's Feature to Be Held Friday if Weather Is Bad; Motorboat Races End Week

By Jack Munhall.

Friday night of this week has been designated as an alternative date for the water pageant, feature of "wonder week," scheduled at the Water Gate Thusday night, it was announced yesterday by James A. Councilor, general chairman of the President's Cup Regatta Association.

Should the dramatization of the struggle between Neptune's undersea forces and teh terresrials be moved up for any reason, the night carnival and street parade for Friday also will be put ahead one day, so as not to conflict.

Other than the weather, which is slowing rehearsals for the Water Pageant, there is no hitch in the plans for a week of spectacular sports and civic features, which is climaxed Saturday and Sunday with the powerboat races on the Potomac.

100 Swimming Entrants

The swimming and diving meet to be held Friday night at the Shoreham Pool already is assured of being the largest acuatic event of the local season, regatta officials reported. One hundred entries have been received and swimmers in New oYrk, Philadelphia, Newark and in many of the other Eastern cities are showing unusual interest.

The Ambassador and Shoreham delegations head the local array of talent. Shoreham's crack women's team will be headed by Betty Strohecker, backstroke artist; Ann Bono, free stylist, while Ambassador will feature Ann Arnson and Dorothy tSeinbroker.

As usual, outstanding outside talent will be drawn most heavily from the Broadwood and Penn Athletic Clubs of Philadelphia. Broadwood, which has dominated mostly every meet it has entered here, is sending a number of stars, including Dorothy Forbes, former national backstroke champion and present holder of five American and world's records.

Miss Forbes, who will be remembered as the miss who was to have taken Eleanor Holm Jarrett's place in the last Olympic games, but was kept home by lack of funds, holds every District and Middle Atlantic record in her special event.

Dotty Evans to Compete

Other Broadwood swimmers who will appear here are 17-year-old Dotty Evans, who in the short space of one competitive year had annext every Middle Atlantic free style record from 50 yards to 500 yards; Lewis Norff, diver, and Otto Schaffhauser, 1937 Middle Atlatnic champ in the 100-yard free style.

Penn A. C. will enter Clayton Fisher, defending diving champion, among others.

The 300-yard medley relay race, one of the meet's features, has been thrown wide open by the announcement that the Philadelphia team will not defend its title. Quite a few new teams have signified their intentions of entering, and a free-for-all battel is expected.

The Newark Women's A. C. will be here for the first time, offering 14-year-old Patricia MacWhorter, junior national 100-yard free style champion and junior national title holder in the 300-yard individual medley swim. Her record will stamp her the favorite in the 150-yard individual medley event.

Boat Club's Bowlers Set

Old Dominion League of Alexandria Will Open Season Next Tuesday Evening

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Sept. 20.—The Old Dominion Boat Club's eight-team bowling league will inaugurate its 1938 season at the Health Center Alleys next Tuesday evening, it was decided at a meeting of members here today. For the first time since formation of the loop eight years ago, the schedule will be mapped out in two sections, with winners of the first and second hal titles meeting in a play-off series for the championship.

Jack Howard, who has been affiliated with the league since it was organized, has been selected president, while Jimmy Blake is vice president, and Frank Davis is secretary-treasurer. Captains of the eight teams, selected today, include Herbie Robertson, Denton Hoy, Jim Luckett, Dr. Nevelle Roberts, Frank Davis, Jimmy Blake, Jack Howard and Bussie Brenner.

Teams will be selected from the 60-odd members next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, at which time the captains will meet for the purpose of naming their selections.

Inclement weather today forced postponement of the annual city championship practice game between the Episcopal High and George Washington High School elevens, scheduled for Hoxton Field at 3:30. Inasmuch as both teams are slated to open their seasons on Friday, they will probably not meet until 1939.

Episcopal tackles Eastern in Washington in the season's inaugural, while George Washington plays host to Fredericksburg High in a night game.

Plans for the Service Club Bowling League season will be mapped out Tuesday evening at the George Mason Hotel, at which time all teams in the loop are asked to send representatives. The organization is composed of teams from the city's four civic clubs, Kiwanis, Lions, Rotary and Executives.

Dr. Herbert Cross, Rotary Club head, is president of the loop, while directors include Dave Bock, Kiwanis; Abe Martin, Rotary; Roger Sullivan, Executives, and Jack Doniphan, Lions.

Dr. Pepper and the Del Ray All-Stars will meet for the Independent Softball League championship in a three-game series to be held no the George Mason School Field next week, officials of the league announced today.

The Peppermen copped first place in the regular schedule, while the Di Razans finished as runners-up to qualify for a spot in the playoffs.

Wheat Falls With Trend Toward Peace

Prices Carried Down 1⅜ Cents a Bushel With Closings Near Day's Lowest Level

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Toppling of prices in Chicago today carried the wheat market down 1⅜ cents a bushel, owing almost entirely to apparent lessened likelihood of widespread war.

Czechoslovakia's reply, accepting in principle recent proposals from Great Britain and France for placating Germany was not received here until after grain trading had ended, but at no time was any special anxiety shown as to whether or not the Czech government complied with the terms submitted. Final quotations in Chicago were but little above the day's lowest level. Wheat has now lost nearly all of the sudden advance scored last week when the war scare was at its height.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ½ to 1 cent down compared with yesterday's finish. December 64⅛@64¼. May 65⅜@65½; corn ⅞@1¼ off. September 52⅛@52, December 49⅝@49¾; oats showing ¼@⅛ setback; rye ⅝@¾ fall. Provisions closed unchanged to 20 cents lower.

Columbia Gas Plans To Sell Pipe Line

New York, Sept. 20 (AP).—Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, it was reported in financial circles today, is considering divesting itself of its controlling interest in Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co.

Edward Reynolds, president of the utility system, said "we have no statement on the subject," but in other quarters it was reported that an investment banking syndicate headed by Glore, Forgan & Co., has offered aproximately $12,000,000 to Columbia Oil & Gasoline Corporation, a subsidiary, for its 404,000-share interest in Panhandle Eastern. Public distribution of the pipe line company's stock is contemplated by the syndicate, it was said.

Lloyds Lifts War Rates 790 Per Cent

Advance Greatest on Cargos Bound for War Zone; Rates on Gold Not Yet Decided

By the United Press.

London, Sept. 20.—Lloyds underwriters today raised war risk insurance rates by as much as 790 per cent for merchandise sent to and from the United States and Canada.

Rates on gold bullion are still subject to negotiation. They range from 30 pence (60 cents) a £100 outward to 5 shillings ($1.20) homeward.

Rates on goods going toward the potential war zone from the American continent to Great Britain, were double and quadruple those moving in the other direction.

The new minimum rates range from ½ of 1 per cent to 2 per cent, with the highest from the Pacific Coast to Britain.

Ships leaving Britain would get out of the potential war zone quickly, while those leaving the United States and Canada would head into it steadily from the time of sailing.

Westbound Rates

The rate for cargoes on ships moving from Britain to the east coast of the United States and Canada has been raised from 6 pence (12 cents) to 10 shillings ($2.40) a £100. On ships going in the other direction at rate is double, or 20 shillings ($4.80).

For cargoes bound for the Pacific Coast ports from Britain the new rate has been set at a minimum of 10 shillings, against 6 pence previously, and the rate for the trip from United States and Canada Pacific Coast ports to Great Britain is quadruple the trip in the opposite direction, or 40 shillings a £100. The latter is 80 times the old rate of 6 pence, or a rise of 790 per cent.

The old rates were discontinued at midnight on Saturday because of the European crisis. They averaged about 1-40 of 1 per cent on cargoes.

Woodward & Lothrop Vote Dividends

The board of trustees of Woodward & Lothrop yesterday declared a quarterly dividend of $1.75 per share on the preferred stock, and 50 cents a share on the common, payable September 29, to stockholders of record September 23.

Stocks Respond to Qualified Optimism on European Developments With Advance to Highest Level Since End of June

New York, Sept. 20.—Financial markets did much today to throw off restraints incident to the fear of a major European war. Nerves are not completely calmed and even among those who were most anxious to have peace preserved there is a feeling of disgust and resentment that democracies had to forsake an ally when faced with the threats of a dictator. This was apparent in the financial district today, and even while the reassured bulls were bidding up stocks and bonds they asked themselves whether such a peace could last.

That Czechoslovakia would accept the British-French plan in principle was assumed early in the day and later confirmed. Consequently the market went ahead with more conviction than was displayed on Monday. Wheat was the natural exception and it sank 1⅜ cents on the assurance of peace.

The most sensational gains took place in the stock market. The composite average gained 1.34 points, the sharpest advance for the day since June 29. Speculative leaders showed many jumpes of from 1 to more than 4 points and there was encouragement for the bullish forces in that trading increased to 1,198,310 shares on the upgrade. There was a moderate selloff in the last hour.

Before business started in New York, the continental markets had reflected the growing reassurance. London reported a strong undertone but with Czechoslovakia 8 per cent bonds heavily offered at declining prices and the German government buying to support Dawes and Young loan issues. Paris, Berlin and Amsterdam issues were strong.

Collapse of Purge

On this market the assumption was that if the fear of war could be liquidated, the Nation's investors would be able to turn their attention to affairs of domestic importance, which include indices of business which are improving slowly and the collapse of President Roosevelt's purge.

All groups participated in the stock rise with the motors and their accessories in the forefront. Investors took kindly to the price reductions announced by the steel industry on railroad supplies. A London report that South African Gold Shares were active, with fairly heavy buying coming in from Johannesburg, was followed by a rise in the golds on this exchange, best gains being turned in by Mac-Intyre and Homestake.

General Motors regained its position as the most active stock of the day and closed up 1¾, the same as United States Rubber. Chrysler added 2, Yellow Truck about a point and Electric Auto-Lite 1½.

Loft Recedes

Loft, Inc., which was the sensation on Monday, dropped back to 4⅛, its future being clouded by the possible outcome of a suit against Pepsi-Cola filed by the Coca-Cola Co. and also by the threat of a suit to restrain Phoenix Securities from exercising an option on Loft shares. In Monday's trading Loft accounted for nearly 15 per cent of the big board's share turnover and the stock more than doubled.

Buying of rails was encouraged by early carloading reports as much as by the cut in steel prices. Southern Pacific stock continued in the limelight, advancing 1⅜, and its various bond prices being up an average of 2 points. New York Central added a point.

Gains of some of the best known speculative leaders today included Allied Chemical, 4; Telephone, 3; du Pont, 3; General Electric, 1¾; Johns Manville, 4½, and Westinghouse, 2⅛.

Fluctuations in commodities were almost entirely due to the change in war sentiment. Wheat has now lost nearly all of the advance of last week when the clouds were the darkest. After its slump of 1⅜ cents a bushel today there was a slight comeback; futures ending the session down ½ to 1 cent. Cotton bounded forward a dollar a bale, the entire list getting back above the 8-cent mak for the first time since September 9. The close was up 19 to 22 points.

U. S. Bonds in Demand

All sections of the bond market turned upward today, domestic issues following the lead of stocks while foreign liens reflected arrangements for smoothing over the Sudeten German problem without recourse to war. Treasury descriptions were prominent with gains ranging up to ¾ of a point, although on a small volume of trading. Wall Street attributed firmness in this section to efforts of dealers in Federal securities and other Treasury bond specialists in refilling their portfolios. For some weeks, while war fears were abroad, Dealers were inclined to be conservative and today's advances in Governments were estimated to be due principally to dealer efforts to regain their positions. The newly issued Treasury 2½s sold at 101⅛, compared with a shade under 100½ on Saturday.

In the domestic bond section, gains of 1 to 2 points were numerous, including such bonds as Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit 4½s which were near 60 or about 25 points above the low for the year; American & Foregin Power issues, Southern Railway, Southern Pacific, Atlantic Coast Line, the Delaware & Hudson refunding 4s, Erie 4s of 1953, International Telephone 5s of 1955, International Hydro 6s, and Mobile & Ohio 5s. Baltimore & Ohio liens were buoyant and active. Nickel Plate issues were frequently traded, but showed a reversal in price trend from recent sessions, the 6s of 1938 breaking 6½ points.

In the foreign section, Czechoslovakia, Belgians and Germans were substantially higher. Japanese and Italian liens also recovered. Yugoslavia state mortgage 7s of 1957 were down 10 on a single sale.

World Trade Makes Gain During July

Improvement Noted in United States, Germany, Canada and Holland

New York, Sept. 20.—World industrial production rose moderately during July, according to the statistical division of the National Industrial Conference Board today. Improvement occurred in the United States, Germany, Canada and Holland. Losses were reported in Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium and the Scandinavian countries.

Composite indexes of foreign industrial production indicate that the sharp contraction that commenced in December, 1937, was at least temporarily checked in May and June. The rise since then, however, has been negligible, and it is generally believed that, aside from the increased industrial activity which might result from war preparations, material improvement is unlikely until the danger of an international conflagration subsides. The depression abroad has been much less severe than that experienced in the United States. While the domestic outlook has improved materially in recent months, however, conditions in many foreign countries have steadily deteriorated.

British business activity receded during July, with steel ingot production falling off sharply. Stocks of raw materials and finished goods have been appreciably reduced in recent months. Rearmament expenditures have increased, but there has been a decline in new capital invested in private enterprise. Reports from a number of leading industries in France indicate a decline in production.

The gold value of world trade, seasonally adjusted, showed no change in 76 countries for June as compared with May. World prices of leading raw materials and foodstuffs advanced 5.4 per cent during July, with all major commodities except tea and wheat sharing in the rise. Rubber prices showed a marked gain.

Common stock prices on ten leading exchanges registered a 4 per cent loss from the beginning of August to September 10. The dollar continued to advance sharply in terms of the leading foreign currencies. The French franc, the Netherlands guilder and the Japanese yen recorded new lows for the year. The pound sterling fell to the lowest level since April, 1935.

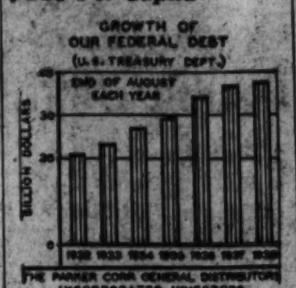
Chinese Mission Here Conferring on Silver

A Chinese financial mission began conferences with Secretary Morgenthau yesterday on conunuance of the United States silver purchase program. An understanding under which United States Treasury has purchased up to $12,000,000 worth of Chinese silver monthly will expire shortly.

The mission is headed by K. P. Chen, personal representative of China's finance minister. Others in it are Hsi Teh-Mon, general manager of the Central Bank of China, and S. D. Ren, member of the Chinese foreign trade commission.

Through the sale of silver to this country, China obtains dollar credits which have been helpful for purchases of materials to carry on warfare with Japan. Japan similarly acquires purchasing power here by selling gold to the Treasury.

Government Debt. $440 Per Capita



THE PARKER CORP. GENERAL DISTRIBUTORS INCORPORATED INVESTORS

Boston, Mass., Sept. 20.—In 1913 the per capita Federal debt of this country was only $12.36. The World War jumped this up to over $300 per capita, while today the Federal debt is about $290 for each inhabitant. The present per capita State and local debt is approximately $150. Thus every person in the country has a Government debt on his head of about $440.

Employment Turns Upward

New York, Sept. 20.—The number of persons employed in the United States, after declining for nine consecutive months from 42,622,000 last September to 37,780,000 in June, showed a slight rise in July to 37,800,000, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. This increase was enough to offset the gain in the supply of workers as the result of the growth of the population.

Daylight Time Ends on Monday

The Paris Bourse will set back its clock on the following Saturday, October 1. Amsterdam, Liverpool and London will be on the new time the week beginning October 2.

STOP! DON'T YOU DARE OPEN THAT UMBRELLA IN HERE! DO YOU WANT TO BRING BAD LUCK?
A BLOWOUT, NO GAS, AND 18 MILES TO THE NEXT FILLING STATION

Bob Burns Says—

I don't know how many times I started to ask you readers to write me and tell me what you think of these little articles, but every time I get "cold feet." I figger I'd better let well enough alone.

I remember one time I wrote a play in three acts and gave it to a producer to look over. He says, "Well, I have three men that always read these plays and decide on 'em—you come back in the mornin' and I'll tell you what they think of it."

The next morning, when I called on him, he says, "Well, the three men read the play and all voted to strike out one act." I said, "Well, that wouldn't be so bad, would it?" And he says, "No, but the trouble is—each one voted to strike out a differn't act."

Work Begun On Arlington Traffic Outlets

Key Bridge, Washington Parkway Extensions to Cut Congestion in Rosslyn, Georgetown

Construction work which will speed heavy Arlington County traffic across the Potomac and beautify the river front is under way or soon will be started.

As outlined yesterday by C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks, the projects will speed up traffic across the Arlington Memorial Bridge, beautify and reduce traffic at Rosslyn Plaza, extend the George Washington Memorial Parkway northward under the Key Bridge, and greatly reduce congestion at the Washington end of Key Bridge and along M street in Georgetown.

The program is financed by regular appropriations and by Public Works Administration grants. Nearly $1,000,000 will be spent before completion.

First Finishes October 15

To be finished about October 15, is a direct connection of Lee boulevard with the Arlington Memorial Bridge.

Already complete are two one-way sections of the new North Memorial avenue on Columbia Island from Memorial Bridge to the new bridge across Boundary Channel, and a bridge over spur tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

As soon as the connecting link is finished between the railroad bridge and the present end of Lee boulevard, traffic from the county can sweep directly to the Memorial Bridge and into the city.

Scheduled for completion in the spring is grading and paving of the George Washington Memorial Parkway from Lee boulevard to Key Bridge. This section of parkway will consist of two 24-foot concrete strips separated by islands from 10 to 30 feet wide.

Parkway Under Bridge

Soundings were completed yesterday for alterations of the Virginia end of Key Bridge to allow extension of the parkway under the bridge, a complicated job.

It will be necessary to maintain traffic over the bridge while the dirt fill under the Virginia side is removed and a new span, making the bridge symmetrical with the District side, is constructed.

A temporary roadway and trestle on the down stream side, over which street cars and buses can move, is planned. Automobile traffic will be detoured over Memorial Bridge.

The roadway, sagging ever since the bridge was completed in 1923, will be raised as much as 3 feet.

Grillwork Rail Dropped

Change of the solid concrete railing which has enraged motorists because it cuts off beautiful views up and down stream was discussed by officials, but substitution of iron grillwork was discarded because it would cost more than $70,000 and the bridge is so constructed that no new railing could be built strong enough to prevent an automobile striking it from going over.

The new span will be 152 feet wide and the parkway under it will be 15 feet above mean low water.

After the new parkway is extended under the bridge a connection will be made with the Lee highway, which will further reduce traffic congestion in Rosslyn and Georgetown. The connection will not be started before next spring.

With this connection automobiles can pass under Key bridge and go directly to Memorial Bridge without getting into heavy traffic.

To Enlarge Plaza

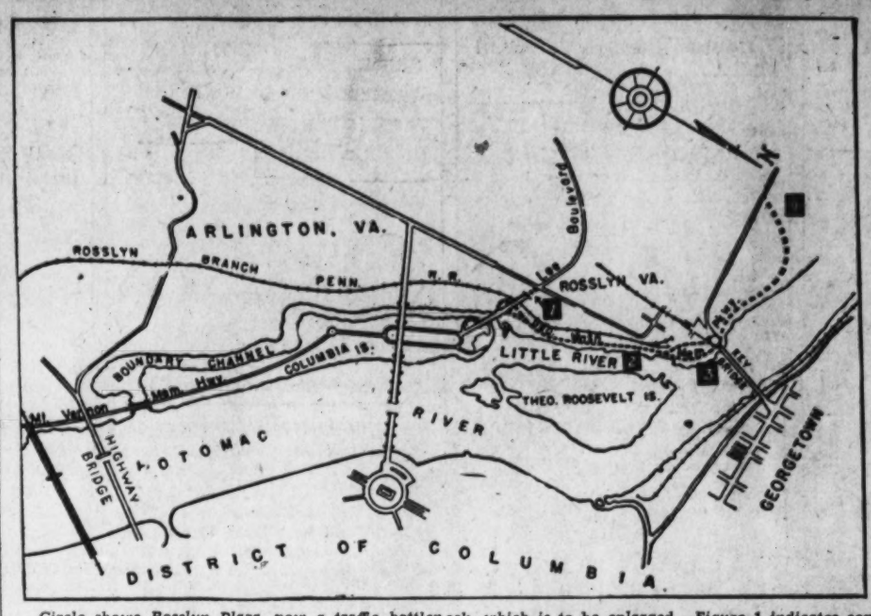
Another project to be started in the undetermined future is enlarging and beautifying of Rosslyn Plaza by destruction of the Washington Old Dominion Railway terminal and Arlington-Fairfax Motor Railer station at the plaza. This would allow room for widening the circle and street car loop and widening the 24-foot roadway to 34 feet.

Park police look for completion of the projects to more than double automobile traffic over Arlington Memorial Bridge, which now carries an average of 18,000 vehicles in 24 hours and reduce traffic on Key Bridge where recent counts show 24,000 vehicles cross in a day.

Speeding of the traffic will be of immense importance to the 48,000 residents of Arlington County. Approximately 95 per cent of the working population works in Washington, and since closing of Military road through the Washington Airport it is estimated that 90 per cent of the traffic crosses Memorial and Key Bridges.

Arlington authorities are considering a truck highway to connect Key Bridge with the Richmond highway at the end of the Highway Bridge at the foot of Fourteenth street.

Highway Improvements Planned for Arlington County



Circle shows Rosslyn Plaza, now a traffic bottleneck, which is to be enlarged. Figure 1 indicates connection of Lee boulevard with George Washington Parkway, which will enable to flow easily over Arlington Memorial Bridge. The section of Memorial Parkway (2) that is being graded and paved from Lee boulevard connection to Key Bridge. Work is to be started on a new span on the Virginia side of Key Bridge (3) so that the Memorial Parkway can be extended underneath it. This will also serve as cutoff connecting parkway with Rosslyn Plaza. Figure 4 indicates where future connection of Memorial Parkway will be made to Lee highway

4 Jailed, 17 Fined In Md. Race Riot

Snow Hill, Md., Sept. 20 (AP).—Magistrate David S. Hickman sentenced four colored men to terms in the House of Correction and fined 17 others today on charges resulting from widespread disturbances here Saturday night in which one colored man was killed and another wounded.

Mayor John O. Bird said the town is quiet and said a census of unemployed colored here still is going on. After its completion, he said, the city council will take some as yet undecided action.

Bird had said earlier numbers of unemployed colored persons, who came from other States to work in now-closed factories, created a serious problem.

Apple Growers Allowed Higher Lead Residue

Secretary Wallace, acting at the request of apple growers, raised the permitted tolerance on lead spray yesterday to .025 grain per pound of fruit.

Heretofore the quantity of lead residue permitted on fruits shipped interstate was .018. Tolerances for arsenic and fluorine residue remain unchanged at .01 grain per pound.

Apple growers and handlers had complained that the lower tolerance necessitated such washing and scrubbing of apples that the fruit's keeping quality was damaged.

The more liberal tolerance figure resulted from experiments conducted by the public health service under a special appropriation.

Montgomery Repeats Offer For Car Line

County Board Again Votes $5,000 for Purchase of Old Right of Way in Chevy Chase

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9213 Clark Ave., Silver Spring, Md. Telephone SHepherd 4200.

Montgomery County's board of commissioners held one of its shortest meetings on record yesterday at Rockville, adjourning before noon after devoting a half-morning session to routine business.

The board voted to repeat its offer of $5,000 to the Capital Transit Co. for the right-of-way of the former trolley line on Connecticut avenue from Chevy Chase Circle to Chevy Chase Lake. The offer, similar to one turned down by the railway company last year, will be presented by F. Barnard Welsh, counsel to the board.

The commissioners were informed by the State roads commission that it does not desire to surface the Unity-Etchison road this year as the county has requested, but the board voted to continue efforts to secure the improvement.

Fred L. Lutes, Silver Spring, and Frank H. Kern, Rockville, were reappointed to the county welfare board and Mrs. Frank F. Zundel, Takoma Park, was named to the board to succeed Miss Lavinia Engle, Forest Glen.

Application of the Potomac Electric Power Co. for a permit to erect a new power substation at Rockville was approved but the petition was turned over to the mayor and town council of Rockville for their consideration.

Bids were asked by the State roads commission yesterday for concrete paving of .38 miles of Montgomery avenue, Rockville, to cover a street railway area. The bids asked are returnable by noon, October 4.

Sponsored by the Silver Spring public health lay committee, a child health conference will be held at 9 a. m. today at the health center in the Silver Spring county building. Dr. Katherine Chapman will be physician in charge, assisted by Mrs. Katherine Johnson, county health nurse, and members of the lay committee. A complete physical examination will be given each child. A station wagon recently purchased by the Montgomery County Public Health Lay Council will be used to transport mothers and children from outlying districts to the county building.

Officers of the Woman's Guild of the Church of Ascension, Silver Spring, have been elected as follows: President, Mrs. T. W. Wheat; vice president, Mrs. Louis Metcalf; secretary, Mrs. William Nixon, and treasurer, Mrs. John Compton. A luncheon will be held September 27 at Mrs. Wheat's home.

A reception for members of the faculty featured the first fall meeting of the East Silver Spring Parent-Teacher Association. A budget of $500 was adopted, $100 of which will be used for playground equipment. Twenty-five dollars was donated to the Silver Spring public health lay committee. A petition with more than 160 names will be sent to the property custodian of the school board requesting that the playground be landscaped to provide greater room for playground equipment. The ways and means committee announced plans for a play and Halloween dance.

The annual drive for funds of the Montgomery County Chapter of the American Red Cross was started last night at a dinner meeting at Hungerford Tavern, Rockville. Mrs. F. Eliot Middleton, county chapter chairman, presided. John B. Diamond, Gaithersburg, is roll call chairman.
